Frederick Vanderbilt Field of New York was freed March 21 of contempt of Congress charges by the late Federal Judge T. Alan Goldsborough, who heard the case without a jury.

Goldsborough granted a defense motion for acquittal, holding Field had been within his Constitutional rights in refusing April 28, 1950, to answer questions of a Senate Foreign Relations Subcommitee investigating communism - in- government charges.

The judge said the questions put to the New York millionaire were "perfectly legitimate and proper" but that he had no reason to suppose Field did not claim in good faith the protection of the provision that no person shall be compelled in a criminal case to be a witness against himself, because Field previously had been charged before Congress with being a Communist spy.

Frank Panzino of Turtle Creek, Pa., a leader of the United Electrical Workers who invoked his Constitutional privilege against possible self-incrimination in refusing to answer questions of a House Un-American Activities Subcommittee, also was acquitted of contempt of Congress March 16.

Three more witnesses acquitted of contempt of Congress charges were Philip J. Jaffe, key figure in the much-investigated "Amerasia" secret-documents case, acquitted May 28; Marcel Scherer of Newark, N.J., a United Electrical Workers Union (Independent) official, acquitted May 29; and David Joseph Bohm, atomic scientist who worked at the University of California's radiation laboratory, acquitted May 31. All had refused to answer questions before Congressional committees on grounds of possible self-incrimination.

Television Issue

The next Crime Committee move to cite a witness for contempt came March 7 when the Committee decided to ask citations against Stanley Cohen and James J. Carroll.

Cohen had been a witness at San Francisco hearings. Carroll had been scheduled to testify in St. Louis, but had refused to appear before a television camera. The Committee, in voting to cite Carroll, said it planned to make a test case of his particular grounds for refusal. At hearings in Washington March 22, however, Carroll went before the Committee, allowing his hands, but not his face, to be televised. He testified at some length, and the Committee voted to cancel the contempt citation.

Another March 22 witness, Jacob "Greasy Thumb" Guzik, refused to testify to the Committee's satisfaction, so the Committee asked that he be cited for contempt. A resolution (S Res 109) for this purpose and eleven other citation resolutions were reported March 30 and the Senate adopted them by unanimous consent the same day. One of the others (S Res 112) was a second citation for Joseph Doto, alias Joe Adonis. The first had been in connection with a Washington appearance; this one was for unsatisfactory New York testimony.

Others cited included Frank Costello, reputed kingpin among the nation's gamblers, Frank Erickson; Morris Kleinman and Louis Rothkopf, linked with interstate gambling enterprises.

Sen. Harry P. Cain (R Wash.) April 2 protested the citation of Kleinman and Rothkopf. He told the Senate the pair had refused to testify solely because of the presence of television cameras. Cain said that in his opinion, a person would be within his rights to refuse to undergo the television "ordeal."

He moved that the vote approving the citation resolutions (S Res. 119 and 120) be reconsidered so that the courts would know that the Senate was not unanimous in believing that witnesses could be forced to testify for TV. Kefauver said he would prefer to see the citations stand, as they would constitute a clearcut issue for a court ruling on the television question. Cain's motion was left pending.

Meanwhile, three of those cited by Congress Feb. 21 were indicted by a federal grand jury in Cleveland March 26. They were James Lacavoli, Joe Di Carlo, and Joe Aiuppo.

Cain Pushes Motion

The same day, two other Crime Committee witnesses — James Moran, former aide to ex-mayor O'Dwyer, and Louis Weber, alleged racketeer — were indicted by a federal grand jury in New York City for perjury before the Committee. Moran, formerly New York City Water Supply Commissioner, was convicted May 9 of lying under oath regarding Weber's visits to his office. Weber was convicted May 16 for saying he did not know Moran.

The Crime Committee, under a new Chairman, Sen. Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md.), reported and the Senate adopted three more resolutions (S Res 159 - 161) on June 25, and another five (S Res 180 - 184) on July 24.

On Aug. 10 Cain's April 2 motion came up again during reconsideration of the vote whereby the Senate had approved the citations for Kleinman and Rothkopf (S Res 119 and 120), who had objected to testifying before televisions and newsreel cameras and to radio broadcasts of the testimony.

Cain told the Senate he was "solely concerned . . . because they are American citizens, and entitled to the same rights which belong to every other American citizen."

"I was disturbed and shocked . . . by the manner in which they were treated," Cain continued. "I saw no effort to get at the truth. It seemed to me that the actors were determined that the show must go on."

Wants Court Ruling

Sen. Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.) said he would like to have a court ruling on the use of TV and radio by committees. He said the only way to get a ruling would be to cite the men for contempt.

Sen. Alexander Wiley (R Wis.), member of the Crime Committee, recommended that the Senate make a general study of TV and broadcasting and adopt rules that would protect witnesses. But he insisted that the two men not "go scot free" in the meantime.

The two contempt citations were then agreed to by the Senate on the 38-13 roll-call vote. (See page 399).

Still four more citation resolutions (S Res 211 - 214) were approved by the Crime Committee before its expiration Aug. 31. These were reported on the Senate floor Sept. 18 and were adopted Oct. 1.

At the time the Crime Committee submitted its final report Aug. 31, indictments had not yet been filed in almost half the cases. Litigation was still going on in most of the cases as the year ended.

The Crime Committee's final report commented that the latest Supreme Court decisions had so expanded the scope of the constitutional privilege against self - incrimination that it seemed a witness might "invoke the privilege even where the possibility of incrimination is quite remote." The Committee therefore explained that contempt cases which had been certified to the United States attorneys but which had not yet been presented to grand juries were being re-examined with a view to determining whether indictments should be sought.

Irving Acquitted

Rep. Leonard Irving (D Mo.) was acquitted Dec. 28, 1951, of all charges of misusing union funds in his 1948 Congressional campaign. Seven of 12 grand jury counts were dismissed Nov. 20. Federal Judge Richard M. Duncan said Dec. 28 there was insufficient evidence on two of the remaining five counts. On the other three, Duncan said he did not believe it was the intention of Congress to prohibit all political activity by union members, even though they were on the union pay - roll.

The counts were contained in two indictments which alleged that Irving violated the Corrupt Practices Act and the Taft-Hartley law in using union funds for campaign purposes. He was named alone on one indictment and with International Hod Carriers, Building and Construction Union (AFL), Local No. 264, on the other.

The counts included specific charges that he had used a union car, union-paid gas, and the services of union employees without paying for them. The sum he was accused of misusing totaled $3,000.

The Congressman was re-elected as president and business manager of the union local June 10, only two days after his indictment He had been head of the union local since 1940.

Irving entered a plea of not guilty June 11 before U. S. District Judge Richard M. Duncan at Kansas City.

"I am not guilty, and I have not the slightest fear of being convicted," Irving said.

His attorney, at the conclusion of the government's case, moved that all 12 counts be dismissed.

On Nov. 20, Federal Judge Richard M. Duncan threw out the seven major counts because of unsatisfactory government witness testimony.

Customs Administration

HR 5505

The House on Oct. 15 passed by voice vote a bill (HR 5505 to improve and simplify the administration of the customs laws. The Senate did not act upon it.

The measure had four major aims:

(1) To facilitate economical administration of the laws by the customs service; (2) to simplify or eliminate complex procedural requirements which delay and discourage importation; (3) to enable the U.S. Customs Service to spend less time dealing with complaints; (4) to eliminate archaic and obsolete provisions of the present law.

It did not propose any changes in classifications or rates of duty.

Chairman Robert L. Doughton (D N.C.) of the House Ways and Means Committee introduced a bill (HR 1535) for this purpose Jan. 15 at the request of the Secretary of Treasury. The Tariff Act of 1930 had been revised by the Customs Administrative Act of 1938, and when further revision appeared necessary Congress in 1948 appropriated funds for a survey of the customs service. With these funds, a private firm of management consultants, McKinsey & Co., was employed by the Treasury Department to make a study of how customs costs could be reduced and service improved. The bill requested by the Secretary of the Treasury contained provisions mainly derived from the recommendations of McKinsey & Co., some from the customs service, from other governmental departments, and from representatives of importers and other groups interested in international commerce.

The House Ways and Means Committee conducted extensive hearings on this bill, starting with Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, John S. Graham, on Aug. 6.

Simplification legislation also was recommended strongly by the Departments of Commerce, State and Agriculture, the Economic Cooperation Administration, and other departments and agencies consulted. The Bureau of the Budget likewise approved.

A clean bill (HR 5505) was introduced by the Committee reflecting its decisions on and amendments to the original version (HR 1535) after lengthy deliberations in executive session.

The new bill was reported favorably on Oct. 1, without any committee amendments.

The House passed the bill, unamended, by voice vote Oct. 15 under a suspension of rules.

The Senate did not act on it.

Mississippi Job Sales Probe

Summary — Charges that members of the pro-Truman Democratic faction in Mississippi solicited donations in return for jobs early in February touched off a lengthy investigation highlighted by a Senate Subcommittee's report affirming the charges, indictment by a federal grand jury of 12 persons, and jail terms for two of the accused.

The probe was started after Mississippi Sens. James O. Eastland (D) and John C. Stennis (D) and Rep. Frank E. Smith (D Miss.) made the "jobs for sale" charges Feb. 21 on the Senate and House floors.

Eastland and Stennis Feb. 27 introduced a resolution (S Res 87) calling for an investigation and after quick Senate approval the task was turned over to an Executive Expenditures Subcommittee. On June 20 it reported that a small group of "willful men" controlling the Mississippi Democratic Committee had "corruptly extorted political contributions" from persons seeking federal jobs.

A federal grand jury July 20 indicted 12 persons on charges of conspiring to sell federal jobs. Two of the 12, a man and wife, pleaded guilty and were sentenced to eight - month prison terms on Sept. 5.

Charges Made

Sens. Eastland and Stennis and Rep. Smith charged on the Senate and House floors Feb. 21 that federal jobs were being sold in Mississippi by the pro-Truman Democratic faction.

The situation was "so bad and corrupt," Eastland said, that he and Stennis hired an investigator to make an inquiry into the charges. They also asked the FBI and the Post Office Department to investigate.

Eastland read into the Senate record two affidavits from Mississippians saying that they had to give checks to the National Democratic Committee to obtain their jobs.

Six Mississippi Representatives — Thomas G. Abernethy, William M. Colmer, Frank E. Smith, John Bell Williams, Arthur Winstead and Jamie L. Whitten, all Democrats — Feb. 22 signed a statement terming the charges serious and saying they must be investigated.

Stennis and Eastland Feb. 27 introduced S Res 87, calling for an investigation. The Senate approved the resolution and the matter was referred to the Committee on Executive Expenditures. Committee Chairman John L. McClellan (D Ark.) put the investigation in the hands of the Group Investigations Subcommittee, headed by Clyde R. Hoey (D N.C.), which immediately began to line up witnesses and gather material.

The same day the Stennis - Eastland resolution was introduced William M. Boyle, Jr., who later was to resign after another investigation (that of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, see Page 508), as chairman of the Democratic National Committee, announced that Clarence E. Hood Jr., Meridian, Miss., had been relieved of his duties as acting Democratic National Committeeman for Mississippi.

$60,000 Paid for Jobs

The Hoey Subcommittee April 9-11 heard a parade of job-seekers and federal job holders in Jackson, Miss., declare they made contributions of from $200 to $1,000 to get federal jobs in Mississippi as postmasters, mail carriers, census takers and price stabilization enforcers, over the past three years.

The Subcommittee obtained evidence that up to $60,000 was paid for federal jobs to a "rump" state committee of Truman Democrats. The group kept no financial reports.

Fred F. Mize, chairman of the Truman State Executive Committee, B. C. Beasley, former acting secretary-treasurer, Mrs. C. W. Murphy, a committee member, and Forrest Jackson, committee counsel, said that "contributions" were collected from job seekers because it was impossible to run their organization on "hot air." Jackson said he thought the group should be consulted on RFC loans in the state, if such loans had "political color."

Sen. Stennis testified that Washington Democratic officials were warned about job-selling in Mississippi, but the warnings were "largely ignored." Subcommittee members McClellan and Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.) denounced the job-selling as a "racket." It "is one of the most vicious . . . I've ever heard of," said Mundt.

Principals in Inquiry

Among those who figured in the inquiry was Paul Dillon, Washington and St. Louis attorney, who managed President Truman's campaign for the Senate in 1934. Dillon helped the pro-Truman Democrats arrange patronage jobs through the Democratic National Committee, the Subcommittee was told. Rep. John Bell Williams (D Miss.) in a speech on the House floor April 9 asked the Subcommittee to investigate Dillon, whom he described as a "notorious underworld fixer . . . a known influence peddler . . . (with) corruption and rascality his chief stock in trade."

Glenn P. Boehm, former St. Louisan and then a Washington industrial consultant, was hired by the pro-Truman Mississippi Democratic Committee in 1949 as a "contact man" with the national group because he knew so many Missourians in Washington, according to testimony.

Deposed Democratic National Committeeman Hood and Curtis Rogers, secretary - treasurer for the state committee, denied they were involved in job - selling for cash. Hood said April 11 he had contacted Maj. Gen. Harry H. Vaughan and Donald S. Dawson, White House aides, and Acey Carraway, former director of the National Committee's finance committee, about both political and business dealings.

Postal officials said April 26 the Post Office Department was unaware that voluntary contributions from seekers of postal jobs were going to the pro-Truman faction in Mississippi.

J. J. Lawler, Assistant Postmaster General, and C. B. Utley, his assistant, appeared before the Subcommittee to tell what they knew about the alleged sale of federal jobs in Mississippi.

Lawler said that in December, 1950, he received an anonymous letter about job sales in Mississippi, and he called Hood to Washington to question him. Hood "assured me there was no selling of jobs in Mississippi," Lawler said.

Post Office Investigation

In January, he related, Postmaster General Jesse M. Donaldson received some "rather authentic information" about job sales, and the Department began a check which resulted in the firing of eight temporary employees and filing of charges against 40 other employees. "Our investigation is not yet complete," Lawler said.

Sen. Mundt said Hood had previously testified that Washington postal authorities had approved a plan permitting the pro - Truman group to accept voluntary contributions.

"That's a lie," Lawler responded.

In answer to a question by Sen. McClellan, Lawler said that in Mississippi, Louisiana and South Carolina, the Post Office accepted recommendations for postal jobs from someone other than the Democratic members of Congress and the regular state Democratic committee. These states supported the States Rights ticket rather than the national Democratic ticket in the 1948 election.

Boehm, who had figured in previous testimony, testified that the Post Office began accepting Hood's recommendations following a meeting between Hood and Presidential Assistant Dawson, in 1949. Hood had complained to Dawson that his patronage recommendations were not accepted, and Dawson "straightened out the situation," Boehm said.

Postmaster General Jesse M. Donaldson testified May 2 that he received a letter from Boyle in July, 1949, stating that the recommendations of Hood should be followed in filling job vacancies.

The only exception was in the third Mississippi district, Donaldson testified, where the letter instructed the Post Office to "go ahead as usual" and accept the recommendations of former Rep. William M. Whittington (D Miss.)

Robert M. Moore, assistant Democratic National Chairman denied May 5 that he had heard of the job sales before complaints had been made by Eastland and Stennis. Hood had testified that Moore knew about the cases in July, 1950.

A Washington Federal Court of Appeals refused May 10 to enjoin the Senate Expenditures Committee from looking into records of Boehm, described as Washington contact man in the Mississippi jobs sales. Judge Harold M. Stephens said evidence presented had been insufficient to issue an injunction.

Issues Report

In a sharply - worded report the Subcommittee June 20 charged that a small group of "willful men" took over control of the Mississippi Democratic Committee after the 1948 elections and "corruptly extorted political contributions" from persons seeking federal jobs.

The report criticized Hood, Mize, Curtis Rogers, Jackson and Beasley for "usurping" the Democratic political organization in the state.

It further criticized the Democratic National Committee which it said gave recognition to this self-appointed "rump" group of Mississippi Democrats after the 1948 election as a reprisal against the regular organization which declined to support the Truman ticket.

Used Power "To Extort"

The Subcommittee said evidence indicated that "Rogers, Beasley, Mize and Jackson used the political power of the Mississippi Democratic Committee to extort contributions" from federal job seekers for postal and price stabilization jobs.

Hood, Jackson and possibly others connected with the Mississippi Democratic Committee "sought to use the political power and prestige of the committee for their financial advantage," the report stated.

It was critical of the Post Office Department for failing to discover the job selling in Mississippi and put an end to it "before the matter was brought to public attention" by the Mississippi Congressional delegation.

Jury Indicts 12

A federal grand jury July 20 indicted 12 persons involved in the Mississippi scandal and on July 23 eight of them pleaded innocent to the charges of conspiring to sell federal jobs.

Pleading innocent were Hood, Mize, Rogers, Beasley, Laverne Yelverton, Roy Brashier, Henry Debrow and Dewey McLeod.

Two of the 12 indicted pleaded guilty Sept. 5 and were sentenced to eight months terms in prison. They were a man and wife, Mr. and Mrs. C. V. Murphy of Winona. Mrs. Murphy also was fined $250. Federal Judge Allen Cox, who imposed sentence, said if Mrs. Murphy paid the fine within 10 days he would suspend the prison term and put her on probation for two years.

Trial of the 10 other defendants was scheduled for early 1952.

Baseball Probe

Some present and past greats and near-greats of baseball were called before the Subcommittee on Monopoly of the House Judiciary Committee in 1951 in an attempt to determine the standing of the nation's number one sport under the anti-trust laws.

The Subcommittee, which completed its hearings Oct. 24, promised that a report on its investigation would be filed during the 1952 session of Congress.

Headed by Rep. Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), the Subcommittee studied the possibility of exempting organized baseball from the anti-trust laws. Under examination were the "reserve clause" binding a player to his ball club until released by the club, and territorial restrictions on new major league franchises.

Ty Cobb, former Detroit Tiger star, opened the hearings with reminiscences from his career and a statement that the reserve clause, or something similar, was essential to baseball. Ford Frick, National League President, told the Committee that baseball contracts were merely long-term contracts with annual salary negotiations.

Wants Four Major Leagues

Celler commented after the Aug. 1 hearing that he was convinced there shoud be four major leagues, one in the West, one in the Southwest, and the two now operating in the East. Territorial rights, the manner of choosing a commissioner, and the lack of arbitration of player-salary disputes must all be questioned, he said, in spite of the "aura of secrecy and sanctity" surrounding baseball.

The Subcommittee questioned George C. Trautman, president of the National Association of Professional Baseball Clubs (the minor leagues), Aug. 3. Trautman defended the reserve clause and territorial rights reservation, saying organized baseball would collapse without them. He declined to say if he thought baseball was operating in interstate commerce.

A. B. (Happy) Chandler, former baseball commissioner and former Democratic Senator from Kentucky, proposed Aug. 6 a survey to determine where additional major leagues could be set up and a realignment made of the major league structure.

"Foundation" of Baseball

Sen. Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.), president of the Western Baseball League, appearing as a witness Aug. 7, said the reserve clause and territorial rights were "the very foundation of professional baseball." Johnson, author of a bill (S 1526) to exempt baseball from anti-trust laws, urged the Committee to approve legislation which would establish beyond doubt the legality of the two controversial planks in the baseball structure.

Ross C. Horning, veteran minor league player then out of baseball, said Aug. 7 that life was hard and pay was low in the minors. He said the reserve clause was unfair to young players, as it tied them to one club and permitted them to be sold or traded without their consent.

After a two-month recess the Monopoly Subcommittee Oct 15 reopened hearings by revealing a report made in 1946 by the then-owner of the New York Yankees. Larry MacPhail, who said major league baseball was "a legal monopoly." He said the "reserve cluase" in a player's contract could not stand up in court.

Clark Griffith, owner of the Washington Senators, testified Oct. 15. He said he opposed changes in the reserve clause, but thought the baseball commissioner should have the power to settle wage disputes between a player and the club. The clause was needed, he said, to hold baseball together.

Criticizes Farm System

Leslie O'Connor, counsel for the Pacific Coast League, testified Oct. 16. He said the reserve clause should be kept but modified to prevent abuses. O'Connor criticized the farm system and said it would ruin minor leauge baseball.

Philip Wrigley, owner of the Chicago Cubs and the Los Angeles Angels, told the Subcommittee Oct. 17 that there was no reason why baseball should get a blanket exemption from anti-trust laws. He said the reserve clause should be modified.

Thomas J. Halligan, head of the Central League, said Oct. 18 the farm system should be banned and the reserve clause limited to eight years. If there were no opening for a player in the majors in eight years, he said, the owning club should make him a free agent.

Testifying Oct. 19, Fred Hutchinson, pitcher for the Detroit Tigers and American League players' representative on the Executive Council of Major League Baseball, said the reserve clause "is a necessary and reasonable provision for the preservation of organized baseball." Lou Boudreau, new manager for the Boston Red Sox, and Harold Reese, shortstop for the Brooklyn Dodgers, also defended the reserve clause.

The Rev. Father Francis A. Moore, San Jose, Calif., priest and former semi-pro ball player, told the Committee that the reserve clause was "morally unjust, because pressure is brought to bear on those who sign the contracts; and while it is said they sign freely, that isn't true." J. Taylor Spink, publisher of Sporting News, defended the reserve clause. "You couldn't have the loyalty of the players," he said, if they were allowed to shop around for the club which would pay them the most.

McCarthy Ouster Proposal

S RES 187

Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis.) Aug. 6, 1951, was accused of "perjury" and his explusion from the Senate was demanded by Sen. William Benton (D Conn.), after a Senate Rules Committee report criticized McCarthy's part in the 1950 Maryland election, which it called a "despicable, back-street type of campaign" (see page 361).

Benton introduced a resolution (S Res 187) calling for the Rules Committee to make a further investigation of the Wisconsin's Senator's participation in this campaign and into "his other acts since his election to the Senate."

A Senate Rules Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections held hearings on the Benton proposal and Oct. 9 voted to have its staff investigate Benton's charges. Further action was postponed until 1952.

Background — The Constitution specifies that a Senator may be expelled only by a two-thirds vote of the Members. The first case to be brought up was that of Sen. Humphrey Marshall of Kentucky, in 1796. He was charged in a memorial from the Kentucky Representatives, backed up by a letter from the Governor, with having been guilty of perjury in a chancery case in court. The committee which investigated exonerated Marshall by a 16-8 vote.

The first Senator expelled was William Blount of Tennessee, who was unseated in 1797 with only one dissenting vote for conspiring to rob Indians of their lands, to debauch them by selling them liquor, and to incite them to hostile operations against the United States and Spain.

The largest number of expulsions came during the Civil War when Southern Senators and several other Senators who sympathized with the Southern cause were expelled, most of them after voluntarily withdrawing.

Benton Asks Ouster

In its Aug. 3 report on the Maryland election contest between Millard E. Tydings, defeated for re-election to the Senate, and John Marshall Butler, who won the election, the Senate Rules Committee named McCarthy and his staff as a "leading and potent force" in the campaign, which they said "brought into sharp focus certain campaign tactics and practices that can best be characterized as destructive of fundamental American principles."

In a Senate speech Aug. 6 Benton said McCarthy should resign, that "a high percentage of the members of this body would resign forthwith if such a report were written about them." He then introduced his resolution for a further investigation and the possible expulsion of McCarthy.

From the Senate floor, the late Sen. Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) scored the Benton resolution as "political."

Later McCarthy charged in a statement that Benton was a tool of the Communists. "Tonight Benton has established himself as the hero of every Communist and crook in and out of government," McCarthy said. "Benton today has performed the important service of helping to properly label the Administration branch of the Democratic party as the party which stands for government of, by and for Communists, crooks and cronies."

McCarthy predicted that "Benton will learn that the people of Connecticut do not like Communists and crooks in government any more than the people of Maryland like them."

The Benton resolution was referred to the same subcommittee — on Privileges and Elections — that investigated the Butler election. It was headed by Sen. Guy M. Gillette (D Iowa.)

McCarthy Offers to Resign

While this group was planning the action it would take, McCarthy made other charges. In an Aug. 9 speech he told the Senate the election report "damns McCarthy from hell to breakfast for his having gone into Maryland to tell the voters about what a whitewash job Tydings had done." Tydings had led the investigation into McCarthy's 1950 charges of Communists in the State Department. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, p. 444.)

McCarthy, in a speech Aug. 30 in New York, offered to resign from the Senate if a jury would try the validity of his charges against top State Department officials and rule against him. He also refused the invitation of the Gillette Subcommittee to take the witness stand at a public hearing on the ouster resolution because the Subcommittee would not permit him personally to cross - examine Benton.

Attacking on another front, McCarthy wrote Sen. Thomas C. Hennings, Jr., (D Mo.), a Subcommittee member, suggesting that he disqualify himself from sitting with the Subcommittee. McCarthy's letter questioned the propriety of Hennings' participation in the hearings because one of the Missourian's law partners, John Raeburn Green, was counsel to John Gates, a Communist leader convicted of conspiring to advocate overthrow of the government. McCarthy's letter also charged that Hennings was counsel to the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, which McCarthy said had "vigorously condemned the conviction of the 11 Communist leaders and has editorialized against my anti-Communist fight along the same lines followed by the Daily Worker."

Hearings

The Subcommittee opened its public hearings Sept. 28 with a 25,000 word statement by Benton asking that the Subcommittee decide, on the basis of the evidence he presented, whether McCarthy "has committed perjury and has practiced calculated deceit."

Benton asserted that the Wisconsin Republican had lied under oath to fellow Senators in 1950 when he denied having said he knew of 205 Communists in the State Department. Benton also challenged McCarthy's personal and public honor in 10 major "cases."

The "cases" dealt largely with McCarthy's communism-in-government allegations, but they also included the 1950 Maryland Senatorial campaign, McCarthy's receipt of $10,000 from the Lustron Corp., McCarthy's accusations in the famed Malmedy massacre, and allegations against a McCarthy employee.

Benton's 10 "Cases"

The substance of Benton's 10 "cases" was as follows:

1. That McCarthy had falsely denied under oath April 24, 1950, before the Tydings Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee that investigated his charges of communism in the State Department, that he had alleged in a speech in Wheeling, W. Va., on Feb. 9, 1950, that there were 205 Communists in the State Department and that Secretary of State Dean Acheson knew it.

2. That in 1948, McCarthy, while a member of a Senate committee on housing, accepted a $10,000 payment from the Lustron Corp., a housing enterprise, ostensibly for writing a book about housing, the substance of which, according to testimony on file, had in fact been prepared by a government agency at McCarthy's request.

3. That on June 14, 1951, McCarthy accused Gen. George C. Marshall of "conspiracy" in a speech of "towering lies miles from honest or honestly intended interpretation and analysis."

4. That on March 30, 1950, McCarthy had falsely told the Senate that then—Sen. Tydings was responsible for the publication of names of persons accused by McCarthy.

5. That McCarthy had been largely responsible for false statements made about Tydings in the 1950 campaign that led to his defeat for re-election.

6. That McCarthy on Feb. 20, 1950, had stated on the floor of the Senate that never would he make there—where he had immunity from libel suits — an accusation that he would not make off the floor, but that, nevertheless, he had "consistently refused" to repeat such statements away from his "umbrella" of protection.

7. That on June 6, 1950, McCarthy had falsely claimed to have photocopies of a Federal Bureau of Investigation "chart" concerning State Department personnel.

8. That McCarthy had told the Senate on Feb. 20, 1950, that he had "81 cases" of disloyal persons in the State Department, "deliberately deceiving the Senate" into supposing that he had new and important evidence, whereas he had in fact picked up old and exploded "cases."

9. That in 1949, in a Senate investigation of charges that the Germans involved in the Malmedy (Belgium) massacre of U.S. soldiers in World War II had been mistreated to force confessions from them, McCarthy appeared to have "falsely accused Americans and excused convicted Germans."

10. That a member of McCarthy's office staff, Don Surine, against whom "seemingly a clear case of lying—and perhaps perjury" had been made in the investigation of the 1950 Maryland election, was still on McCarthy's payroll.

McCarthy Derides Charges

McCarthy was away from Washington at the time, on a speaking tour, having ignored the Subcommitte's invitation to appear the same day. In Santa Fe, N. Mex., he referred to Benton as a "mental midget" and refused to comment on Benton's charges against him.

Later, on Oct. 9, McCarthy sent a letter to the Subcommittee declining to appear.

"Frankly, I do not intend to even read, much less answer, Benton's smear attack," McCarthy said. "I am sure you realize that the Benton type of material can be found in the Daily Worker almost any day of the week and will continue to flow from the mouths and pens of the camp followers as long as I continue my fight against Communists in government."

Benton, in his first public comment on the McCarthy ouster after his Subcommittee appearance, told a Connecticut radio-audience Oct. 6 that McCarthy was "a Joseph-Come-Lately" in the fight against Communists. He said McCarthy was a "virtual unknown" who jumped on the issue in 1950 long after the government began weeding Communists out of the government in 1947.

Vote Staff Probe

The Subcommittee voted unanimously Oct. 9 to have its staff conduct an investigation into Benton's charges that McCarthy was unfit to keep his Senate seat.

Chairman Gillette told the press: "The Subcommittee unanimously voted to instruct the staff to take Benton's 10 charges and make their own study and investigation of the allegations and report the findings of fact . . .Then we'll determine where to go from there."

Benton also requested the Subcommittee to inquire into McCarthy's activities before he became a Senator, but the Subcommittee took no action on that request, Gillette said.

On Oct. 17 Benton told the Elections Subcommittee he had new evidence showing that a personal spy "on the payroll of Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis.) is an admitted homosexual ex-Communist."

XUM

He referred to Charles E. Davis, American ex-sailor, who had pleaded guilty to spying for Sen. McCarthy in Switzerland and had been convicted of espionage, sentenced to eight months in prison, and ordered deported by a Swiss court.

McCarthy said Oct. 17 that Davis had written and even telephoned him from Switzerland but that his appeals for a job and money were rejected "because the stuff he (Davis) had was meaningless."

The Subcommittee ordered Davis to appear before it Nov. 15, but the subpoena was revoked because prior to that he gave testimony to Subcommittee staff members in Washington. He was put under directions to be prepared to testify if called at a later date.

On Nov. 9, Gillette announced that the Subcommittee would meet in 1952 to decide whether the findings of its staff warranted further open hearings.

Meanwhile, McCarthy announced he would seek re-election in 1952. His term was to expire in 1953.

Congressional Reorganization

The Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments held extensive public hearings in June, 1951, on proposals for changing Congressional practice as set forth by the 1946 Legislative Reorganization Act. But at the end of the first session, neither a report nor legislation had been formulated from the study, though several bills were in the drafting stage.

As hearings began June 6, Sens. Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) and Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md.) proposed the establishment of a Senate Committee on Veterans Affairs. Ferguson also recommended that the Senate schedule floor sessions and committee hearings on alternate days, that an estimate of cost accompany all proposed legislation, and that committee procedures be revised to protect the rights of witnesses. The last proposal was seconded by another witness, Rep. Chet Holifield (D Calif.) who suggested, in addition, the establishment of a Joint Committee on Organization of Congress.

Urges Salary Hike

On the same day, Sen. William Benton (D Conn.) proposed that the salaries of members of Congress be increased to $25,000 a year, and that they be given increased expense accounts, liberal retirement benefits and larger and better paid staffs. He complained also that Congress devotes about 5,000 man hours each year to running the government of the District of Columbia. The only remedy for that, said Benton, was to grant the District self-government. Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis.) suggested Congress set up its own loyalty program for Congressional committee employees, with the FBI screening all applicants.

On June 8, Sen. Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) urged the Committee to draw up a "code of fair play" to govern the conduct of Congressional hearings and investigations. He also said as many as possible should be televised, that electrical voting should be instituted and the District of Columbia should be granted self-rule.

Arthur N. Holcombe, a Harvard University professor and past president of the American Political Science Association, June 12 criticized the Congressional system of selecting committee chairmen on the basis of seniority. Congressmen obtain committee chairmanships "on the combination of longevity and a safe district" even though they may be out of sympathy with their party majority, "grotesquely unsuited for the chairmanship" or "suffering grievously from the infirmities of old age." He recommended that committee chairmen be selected by caucuses of the majority party.

Robert Heller, chairman of the National Committee for Strengthening Congress, proposed June 14 that the seniority system be abolished and that committee chairmen be selected by a committee on committees or by Senate and House majority leaders.

Professor Belle Zeller, of Brooklyn College, and Dr. Edgar Lane, of Princeton University, urged comprehensive changes in the Federal Registration of Lobbying Act and Sen. Wayne Morse (R Ore.) proposed that candidates for federal offices be required to file complete accounts of campaign expenditures.

Rep. Usher L. Burdick (R N.D.) cast a negative note into the hearings June 14 when he testified that higher pay for Congressmen was not necessary because there was no dearth of candidates at the existing salary. On June 18, Sen. Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.) urged that the Senate be required to limit its debate, both as to time and subject matter. Former Rep. Clarence F. Lea (D Calif.) testified June 19 that terms of House members should be extended from two to four years.

Wants Debate on TV

Paul Sifton, of the United Automobile Workers-CIO urged June 20 that Congressional hearings and debates be broadcast and televised. Rep. Winfield K. Denton (D Ind.) testified in favor of his bill (HR 2130) which would provide a remedy for persons slandered, libeled or defamed by members of Congress.

James Loeb Jr., representing Americans for Democratic Action, urged June 21 that all members of Congress be required to file sworn statements about their outside income. He also said he would support a pay increase for Congressmen. Another witness, Beardsley Ruml, New York businessman and tax expert, recommended that the chief justice of the U.S. Supreme Court and the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board be named to recommend changes in Congressional salaries and retirement allowances.

Rep. Foster Furcolo (D Mass.) suggested that freshmen Senators be elected for only two years on their first term so that voters might have an opportunity to make an early change if not satisfied. Rep. Dwight L. Rogers (D Fla.) proposed that roll call votes be required for passage of appropriations legislation. Elmer W. Henderson, of the American Council on Human Rights, asked that Congress establish committees on civil rights.

The question of raising the pay of Congressmen and Senators got more attention June 22 when Rep. Abraham J. Multer (D N.Y.) said Congressmen should raise their salaries to $25,000 a year, and eliminate the $2,500 tax-free expense account they get under existing pay schedules. Multer maintained this doubling of Congressional salaries was necessary to enable House and Senate members to keep up residences in both Washington and their home districts, as they almost invariably have to do.

On June 27, Sen. Styles Bridges (R N.H.) also endorsed the proposed increase in Congressional pay, and added he would favor a provision for Congressional pensions based on length of service. The same day, Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) proposed that major Senate committees be enlarged so that minority freshmen Senators would not have to serve only on minor committees. Both Bridges and Taft urged return to the "omnibus" appropriation procedure.

Election Probes

Summary

Three Congressional groups conducted investigations into reported irregularities in the 1950 House and Senate elections.

In the Senate, the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections of the Rules and Administration Committee conducted the probes. Subcommittee members were Guy M. Gillette (D Iowa), Chairman, A. S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.), Thomas C. Hennings, Jr., (D Mo.), Robert C. Hendrickson (R N.J.) and Margaret Chase Smith (R Maine.).

The Senate Subcommittee conducted extensive hearings on the Ohio election contest between Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) and Joseph T. Ferguson, his defeated Democratic opponent, and the Maryland election between Sen. John Marshall Butler (R Md.) and former Sen. Millard E. Tydings (D Md.).

This group also heard testimony on general federal election problems and conducted brief investigations into the Oklahoma and New York Senatorial elections.

In the House of Representatives, the Special Committee to Investigate Campaign Expenditures made a study late in 1950 of the House elections, and made detailed recommendations for stiffer election laws Jan. 3. Committee members were Mike Mansfield (D Mont.), Chairman, Frank L. Chelf (D Ky.), Charles B. Deane (D N.C.), the late Frank Fellows (R Maine), and John Jennings, Jr. (R Tenn.), who was not re-elected to Congress for 1951.

The Elections Subcommittee of the House Administration Committee conducted a series of investigations into contested House elections. All protests were rejected by the Subcommittee and by the full House.

SENATE STUDY

The Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections held several hearings on proposals to strengthen federal election laws. Chairman Gillette said the group would seek new ways to curb mounting campaign expenditures and unfair campaign practices.

William M. Boyle, Jr., then chairman of the Democratic National Committee, testified Sept. 13 that "completely baseless and defamatory attacks on individuals" in political campaigns should be outlawed by Congress.

He said such techniques had "already begun to poison our political life."

He also recommended that responsibility for running elections be centralized, that election days be holidays, that uniform election and registration laws should be put into effect, and that 18-year-olds should be allowed to vote.

Attorney General J. Howard McGrath told the Subcommittee Sept. 14 that effective publicity and tighter laws governing election expenditures would help curtail the use of defamatory literature in election campaigns.

Would Include Primaries

Saying that existing laws provided numerous loopholes, McGrath recommended the laws be changed to cover primary elections and nominating conventions and to include Presidential electors and candidates for President and Vice President.

McGrath also recommended the establishment of an independent commission to assure the effectiveness of the election laws and the strengthening of civil rights laws to provide minority groups their right to vote without interference.

Sen. Benton told the Subcommittee Sept. 14 that he believed the law should "eliminate all ceilings on campaign contributions from individuals and groups not on the public payroll." At the same time, he added, it should "insist upon the most rigorous reporting and publicizing of all contributions from whatever source and used for whatever purpose."

Benton proposed the appointment of a national citizens commission to study and report on political campaign behavior. He said, "I suggest that players should not simultaneously be umpires."

Saying that the Republican Party "deplores defamatory and scurrilous campaign tactics, whether in literature or on the stump," Guy G. Gabrielson, chairman of the Republican National Committee, told the Subcommittee Sept. 17 "it should recommend that a better example be set at the top political level."

Gabrielson said he believed that the expenditures of the major party organizations and their candidates were of "legitimate concern to the public."

BUTLER-TYDINGS CAMPAIGN

Background

The Nov. 7, 1950, elections sent John Marshall Butler (R Md.) to the Senate after he polled 43,111 more votes than the incumbent, Millard E. Tydings (D Md.). Butler received 326,291 votes, 53 per cent of the total cast. Tydings received 283,180 votes.

Butler reported that he spent $90,603 in his campaign. Tydings reported expenditures of $21,823. Butler was the first Republican elected to the Senate from Maryland since Sen. Phillips Lee Goldsborough was elected in 1929.

Butler had an uphill campaign. He failed to win a majority of the popular votes in the Sept. 18 primary, but won the GOP nomination from Gen. D. John Markey (ret.) on the basis of Maryland's "county unit" system.

Then he faced Tydings, a veteran of 24 years in the Senate. He said Tydings "hoodwinked" the public and used a "whitewash brush" to gloss over charges by Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis.) that the State Department harbored Communists. Tydings was Chairman of a Senate Subcommittee which investigated the McCarthy allegations. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, p. 444.)

Butler attacked President Truman as the "sleeping watchdog of national defense" and Tydings as "the errand boy for the Administration." Both were responsible for unpreparedness in Korea, he charged, because the President had "90 days' warning on Korea" and Tydings, as Chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, did not needle the Department of Defense to better train and equip men. McCarthy helped Butler in the campaign.

Butler favored "streamlining war production," the selection of "patriots" only to fill government jobs, rigid government economy on non-defense expenditures, a "sound tax policy" and adoption of the Hoover Commission recommendations.

Senate Veteran

Tydings, a 60-year-old veteran of World War I, had served continuously in the Senate since elected to it in 1926.

After the election, Tydings charged that Butler's supporters circulated "false and misleading" statements and a "composite" photograph which made it appear that Tydings was engaged in friendly conversation with Earl Browder, former head of the U. S. Communist party. The photograph was actually two separate pictures, pasted together, Tydings said.

Tydings did not contest Butler's election, however, and the latter was seated in the Senate "without prejudice" Jan. 3 after the Democrats turned down a proposal to protest his seating.

Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.) brought up the question at the Senate Democratic conference Jan. 2. He suggested that Butler's fitness to sit might be questioned in view of reports that he had "condoned" the spread of doubtful literature during the campaign.

The Democrats, however, unanimously agreed to permit the seating of Butler "without prejudice" pending further investigation of Tydings' charges by the Senate Campaign Expenditures Subcommittee headed by Sen. Guy M. Gillette (D Iowa).

Republicans agreed not to protest the Democratic motion, made by Majority Leader Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.), before Butler took his oath of office on Jan. 3, on the ground that "it would not mean anything."

Argue Over Rules

The Democrats contended they would be able to challenge Butler's seating later by a simple majority vote. But Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) said Republicans were convinced it would take a two-thirds majority to oust Butler later, which the Democrats obviously would not be able to muster.

There was no hard-and-fast rule in either House on challenging a Member's right to a seat. The Constitution in Section 5 simply provides that "Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns and qualifications of its own Members."

Several Senators had been deprived of their seats by a simple majority vote of the Senate.

Hearings

Tydings was an early witness when the Senate Elections Subcommittee opened hearings. He charged Feb. 20 that Butler and his campaign associates spread "deliberate lies. . . scurrilous and untrue printed matter," and made "wholesale use of funds in an illegal manner" in the Maryland Senatorial campaign.

Tydings did not request the unseating of Butler but did ask the group to recommend criminal libel action if it found that his charges were true.

Tydings testified after Butler challenged the Subcommittee's right to hear the defeated Maryland Democrat. Butler protested the investigation was a "fishing expedition," and said he had not been given a bill of particulars as to the charges made against him.

Butler told the group he was certain that no evidence would be found of fraud, bribery, corruption, or "other sinister methods" which could be the grounds for unseating him. He said he had no personal knowledge of any violation of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act in his campaign, or of any state law. Any technical or trivial violations resulted from "inexperience or inattention", he said.

His campaign expenditures did not exceed the legal limit, he said. By making "reckless and unjustified attacks" on him, Butler said, Tydings was attacking the "intelligence and honesty" of the Marylanders who voted for Butler.

Butler said the Subcommittee had two courses open to it. If it should determine that its preliminary investigation disclosed probable cause for his disqualification, he should be given a bill of particulars, and other rights inherent in a judicial proceeding. Otherwise, it should report to the Senate that there is not sufficient evidence to hold a hearing on the Maryland campaign.

The Subcommittee considered Butler's requests briefly in closed session. Then Chairman Monroney reopened the hearing after telling Butler that his requests would be granted. As Tydings began his testimony, Butler left the room, declining to hear Tydings "malign me."

Tydings Details Charges

In his 90-minute statement to the Subcommittee, Tydings detailed his charges against the Butler group.

He told of the distribution of copies of a tabloid called "From the Record," paid for, he said, by Butler campaign headquarters. It blamed Tydings for high casualties in the Korean campaign, said Tydings ordered William W. Remington — convicted of perjury for denying he was a Communist— kept on the government payroll, and presented a picture of Tydings apparently in friendly conversation with Earl Browder, former chief of the U. S. Communist Party.

Tydings charged the picture was a "composite" photograph printed in the Washington, D. C., Times-Herald plant, with the aid of Frank M. Smith, an editorial writer for the paper who became Butler's administrative assistant after the election.

Fulton Lewis, Jr., Mutual news commentator, made frequent anti-Tydings broadcasts, Tydings said. This was "a clever way to get around the law that corporations cannot contribute to political campaigns." Tydings asserted. He said that Col. Robert R. McCormick, owner and publisher of the Chicago Tribune, also was the owner of the Times-Herald and the Tribune corporation was a large stockholder in the Mutual Broadcasting Corporation.

Others instrumental in spreading "smears" against him in the campaign, Tydings said, were John M. Jonkel, Chicago public relations man who was Butler's campaign manager; Mrs. Ruth M. Miller, publisher of the Times-Herald and a niece of Col. McCormick; Sen. McCarthy and Roscoe Simmons, Chicago, who operated out of Butler's campaign headquarters.

"Ride" Charged

William H. Fedder, Baltimore printer, told the Monroney Subcommittee Feb. 27 that he was threatened with a "McCarthy investigation" Nov. 6, 1950, for failure to give back a letter he had received from Sen. Butler.

He said he was taken for an all-night ride by three men who attempted to get the letter from him. Fedder said it guaranteed payment of about $12,000 due him for printing and distributing campaign literature for the Butler campaign headquarters, including 500,000 copies of the tabloid, "From the Record."

Fedder said the three men who took him for his night ride were Donald A. Surine, an investigator for Sen. McCarthy, Ewell Moore, and George Nilles, not further identified.

Surine "told me that if I didn't give him the letter, they would fix me up and put me through a McCarthy investigation." Fedder said. "I told him that I couldn't give him the letter even if I wanted to — that the letter was in my attorney's office."

The witness said that he was finally forced by Surine to sign a statement indicating that all bills were paid, although, he said, at that time he actually had received only $8,000 on the $20,000 job which he had done for Butler.

Although Cornelius P. Mundy, treasurer of the Butler headquarters, refused to pay him, Fedder said, he finally received complete payment for his work from the Butler staff by Dec. 26, 1950.

He testified several thousand dollars in checks were credited to his account by Jonkel, Butler's campaign manager. Among them was a $1,000 check signed by Sen. Owen Brewster (R Maine), chairman of the Senate Campaign Committee.

The Brewster check was included by Butler in his Feb. 27, 1951, report to the Senate of $27,100 in campaign contributions not previously listed. Butler furnished the new data on receipt of a letter from Jonkel, which detailed the 10 contributions.

Surine Enters Denial

Fedder's testimony was described as "fantastic fabrication" when Surine took the stand Feb. 28. Surine also derided Fedder's story of the "ride." Fedder was truthful only when he "admitted he had lied" and admitted returning stamps and a $500 check advanced to him by the Butler headquarters, asserted Surine in a statement issued in McCarthy's office.

Jonkel, testifying before the Subcommittee March 1, detailed a "short circuit" bookkeeping system used in the Butler campaign. This meant direct payments to creditors without first sending contributions to the campaign treasurer, he explained. Transactions were accounted for in letters to Mundy, Jonkel said.

Dispute on Floor

Sen. Herman Welker (R Idaho), speaking meanwhile on the floor of the Senate, urged a halt to "this whole silly business" of investigating the Maryland campaign. Welker called Tydings " the white wash king" and accused him of trying to smear Butler.

Welker said the Senate's action in seating Butler "without prejudice" was "disgraceful." The material distributed in the Maryland campaign was "mild" compared with that distributed in his own state and in Ohio, Florida, Utah and several other states, he asserted.

At the close of Welker's speech, Democratic Floor Leader Ernest W. McFarland (Ariz.) praised the fairness of the "bipartisan, evenly divided" group hearing the case. Gillette attacked Welker's speech as "ill-advised."

Jonkel Resumes Account

Jonkel continued his testimony on March 2, 6 and 7. He described the office of Sen. McCarthy as a source of information in the campaign. Jonkel also testified that Miss Jean Kerr, legislative aide to McCarthy who was on leave of absence, as well as Surine and Rex Lee, another McCarthy investigator, took part in the Butler campaign.

Questioned further about the tangled financial affairs of the Butler campaign, Jonkel said he never had discussed with Mundy his "short circuit" bookkeeping system. As Jonkel described this procedure, receipts and expenditures were not cleared, as law required them to be, with the campaign treasurer. Jonkel said Mundy may have advised him his system was against Maryland law "but it left such little impression on me that I don't recall."

He said a number of checks, amounting to about $5,000, had been brought to his office by the McCarthy employees. They were among those exchanged and spent under the "short circuit" process, he said, and had been included in the $27,100 supplemental campaign statement filed with the Senate. Maryland law required a full statement within 20 days after the election.

Still another $1,600 in previously unreported contributions to Butler was brought to light by Jonkel March 6.

Jonkel also identified McCarthy as one of "about 15 persons" who suggested publication of the campaign newspaper, "From the Record." The witness said the material had been worked up by Miss Kerr, among others, and that it had been printed in the plant of the Washington Times-Herald, after Mrs. Miller, then editor of that paper, said she would print it as a "favor." Jonkel also testified that Mrs. Miller, whom he had met previously in Chicago, loaned him $1,500 during the campaign and made another $2,000 campaign contribution, though it was in the form of a check made out to him personally. He said "I presume I did report" the check to Mundy.

Quizzed about the details of the tabloid, Jonkel said, "We worked with the fact that a very big doubt existed in the minds of the people of Maryland," about whether Tydings had "whitewashed" the State Department during the probe of McCarthy charges that the agency harbored Communists.

Jonkel March 7 told the Subcommittee he "probably did" authorize payment for the distribution of the sheet, but he had no clear recollection of the transaction. Jonkel said the project "was not my baby," adding it was sponsored by "The Young Democrats for Butler Committee."

Floor Interest Renewed

Again, on the Senate floor, interest in the Monroney group's study prompted action. Some Republicans March 6 criticized the Subcommittee's investigation.

Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa) touched off the GOP move in the Senate with a defense of the composite picture figuring in the hearings. The Iowan said it was "completely honestly" represented as a composite. He said the "hue and cry" reminded him of faked pictures circulated during the New Deal to get funds for Rexford Guy Tugwell's Resettlement Administration and votes for the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1936.

Owen Brewster (R Maine) quoted 1938 news accounts which reported that Roosevelt, who went into Maryland that year to try to unseat Tydings, referred to the Senator as one of the "composite" conservatives.

After the speechmaking, the Senate dropped the subject.

As hearings continued, Perry S. Patterson, attorney for the Washington Times-Herald, testified March 8 that at least 50 per cent of the material for the tabloid had been furnished by McCarthy. Patterson said he examined all the material before the paper was printed by the Times-Herald and did not consider it libelous.

XUM

Edward B. Freeman, president, and John Purnell, secretary, of the "Young Democrats for Butler," who sponsored the tabloid, were called and testified that their ages, respectively, were 46 and 34. Freeman said with a grin he guessed he wasn't so young. Purnell testified he did not see the tabloid material before it was circulated and was neither consulted about nor had anything to do with its distribution.

Mrs. Miller testified March 13 that McCarthy told her a tabloid was to be used in the campaign.

"The first time I heard of it was when Sen. McCarthy called me up and said a group wanted to put out such a paper," Mrs. Miller told the Subcommittee. Arrangements were made for the Times-Herald to do the production job, for which it was paid $1,440, she said.

Origin of Picture

Mrs. Miller said that she did not know how the composite photograph got into the tabloid.

Frank M. Smith, Times-Herald writer, testified the idea of using the composite picture was that of Garvin E. Tankersley, assistant managing editor of the Times-Herald. On March 13, Smith denied that the Tydings-Browder picture was a "fake," as Tydings earlier charged. "It was plainly marked composite," Smith said. "It was not a fake. It was not a fraud. It was not proposed to deceive anyone. . .The composite was designed to show. . .Browder talking and Tydings listening."

Tankersley testified that the picture of Browder which he selected was facing the wrong way, so that he had to have it reversed. He personally checked the proofs to make sure the picture was labeled a composite, he said. He wanted to get Tydings and Browder "as close together as possible," he stated.

Smith said that the material used in the tabloid came from the office of McCarthy, from the Butler headquarters, from columns written by David Lawrence, from the Congressional Record, and from files of the Chicago Tribune and Times-Herald.

Robert Thurston, chief accountant for the Times-Herald, testified March 13 how the charge of $1,440 for the tabloid was arrived at by the Times-Herald, which printed 500,000 copies.

Sponsored By Request

W. F. Peterson of Baltimore, who suggested the Young Democrats for Butler organization, said Jonkel, Butler's campaign manager, had asked the group to sponsor the tabloid, which it agreed to do. The organization did not supply any material for it, he said in testimony March 13.

Mrs. Miller also testified about her contributions in the campaign. She said she contributed $2,000 to Butler's primary campaign and $5,000 to his general election campaign. Her $5,000 contribution was in the form of a loan, but she did not expect it to be repaid, she explained.

(The Corrupt Practices Act provides that all individuals making expenditures in connection with political campaigns in two or more states, other than contributions to political committees and aggregating $50 or more within a calendar year, file reports with the Clerk of the House of Representatives. A check by Congressional Quarterly March 1 showed Mrs. Miller to be the only person who had filed such a report. In addition to her Maryland contributions, she contributed $100 to the successful campaign of Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.), Mrs. Miller reported.)

Roscoe C. Simmons, Negro columnist, testified March 14 that he was in the employ of the Chicago Tribune when he made 56 campaign speeches for Butler. Three days after the election he went on the Times-Herald payroll, he said.

Simmons said he worked under the direction of Marse Callaway, a Negro Republican leader in Baltimore, who circulated about 1,000 copies of a campaign circular called "Back to Good Old Dixie." It listed a number of Tydings' votes against civil rights proposals and other material intended to attract Negro votes for the Republican candidates.

Callaway testified about the circular March 14. He said, "Tydings was not popular with colored people because he never did anything for us . . . All the gains we get we get under Republican reign." He attributed Tydings' defeat to "blunders" by former Gov. William Preston Lane and to the "unpopular" Maryland sales tax.

Ewell Moore, a former employee of Sen. McCarthy, demanded March 20 that the recorded testimony of the Senate Elections Subcommittee be turned over to the Justice Department for a study of statements for possible perjury. Both Moore and Surine, investigator for McCarthy, told the Subcommittee that William H. Fedder, a Baltimore printer, lied when he testified Feb. 27.

Charges Witness Lied

Surine testified that Fedder not only lied about being threatened and forced to take a "midnight" ride, but also tried to cheat the Butler headquarters about the amount of postal cards which he had addressed and mailed for Butler. Fedder testified he had overstated the number of cards finished to take the heat off him.

Following this testimony Sen. Margaret Chase Smith (R Maine) said "it is evident someone has committed perjury." She asked that Fedder and Tydings be recalled to the stand.

Ray Kiermas, another McCarthy employee who helped out in the Butler campaign, testified March 20 that he had asked Fedder to speed the last-minute postcard project Nov. 4. He said he gave Fedder "a token payment" of about $500, and could not recall where he got the money.

Kiermas said he asked Surine to check on Fedder's work to be sure that the cards were mailed. The "midnight ride" which took place Nov. 6 was merely for the purpose of checking on Fedder's work, according to Surine and Moore.

Others who helped out on the postcard project were Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Lee. Mrs. Lee told the Subcommittee March 20 that she worked as a volunteer, and Lee, minority clerk of the House Appropriations Committee, said he worked as a "kind of messenger boy."

Commentator Testifies

Fulton Lewis, Jr., radio commentator for Mutual, testified March 20 that Tydings' charges were "based on unsubstantiated hearsay, wounded ego, and an irresponsible disregard of the truth."

Lewis said his broadcasts on Tydings were not political speeches but were "strictly legitimate truth, factual reporting and commentary." Therefore, Tydings' argument that he should have "free time" to reply was "untenable," Lewis said. Lewis also charged that Tydings' campaign literature was "unprincipled and untruthful — clearly conceived in intellectual dishonesty."

Mrs. Catherine Van Dyke, office manager in Butler's campaign headquarters, testified March 22 that she promptly turned over campaign contributions to Mundy, treasurer of the Butler campaign committee.

William J. Christopher said March 27 that he sold for junk or burned about 150,000 copies of the tabloid, "From the Record." Christopher testified he considered the tabloid an "insult to the people's intelligence." Then a Butler campaign volunteer, Christopher said he "thought it was to Mr. Butler's best interests that I destroy the tabloid."

J. E. Adkins, Jr., of Baltimore, counsel for Christopher, preceded his client to the witness stand. He testified that two men who identified themselves as investigators had approached Christopher to talk about the hearing. The unidentified men frightened Christopher, Adkins said.

Patrolman Francis Cordwell of Baltimore testified March 28 that Fedder had twice given him "sketchy" accounts of "being taken for a ride" but that he took "very little stock" in the story.

Fedder was recalled to testify Mar. 29. Sen. Smith asked him about charges that he had committed perjury and that former Sen. Tydings and Louis H. Fried, a committee investigator, had "induced you to do it."

"That is not true," Fedder said. "Tydings did not induce me to do anything." He also denied that Fried put words in his mouth when he appeared before the Subcommittee Feb. 27. Fedder again identified those who took him on the midnight ride as Surine, Moore and George J. Nilles.

Tydings Returns

Tydings testified in a closed meeting April 3, presenting "new evidence" to the Subcommittee which was not disclosed.

He filed a formal complaint April 5 with Leslie L. Biffle, Secretary of the Senate, charging that Sen. Butler violated Maryland and federal laws by spending excessive amounts in the election.

"Specifically," Tydings said in his written complaint, "sums of money were expended by Mr. Butler and others in his behalf far in excess of those reported as required by the laws of the State of Maryland and the laws of the United States."

Biffle turned Tydings' complaint over to Chairman Monroney of the Elections Subcommittee.

The Subcommittee April 10 heard Jean Kerr, research assistant to Sen. McCarthy, testify that the much-disputed tabloid "did not have sufficient pages to tell the truth about Tydings . . . I'm sure every part of the tabloid is true," she said.

Tydings appealed to the Subcommittee April 10 to bring in a "ringing report" denouncing the campaign of Sen. Butler.

Tydings said that although he was complaining about the conduct of the campaign, he was "not recommending any particular action" relative to the unseating of Butler.

The former Senator again asked the Subcommittee to look into the question of criminal libel. Although it could not institute such action, he said the group could recommend it.

Jonkel Fined

Jon M. Jonkel, pleaded guilty June 4 and was fined $5,000 and costs in Baltimore criminal court for violating Maryland election laws.

He pleaded guilty to these indictments:

Acting as Butler's political agent without having been formally designated as his campaign manager and without being a citizen or resident of the state of Maryland.

Failing to file a detailed report of campaign receipts and expenditures as required.

Failing to keep proper books and records of financial matters.

Each charge was doubled to cover both the primary and general election. Jonkel was indicted May 2.

Jonkel and his attorney, G. C. A. Anderson, maintained that the violations were merely "technical." As the campaign progressed, Anderson told the court, "no campaign manager was formally appointed and Jonkel by sheer force of circumstances found himself acting" as the manager.

Judge Joseph Sherbow held that the violations were "serious" and Jonkel's unfamiliarity with Maryland law was "no excuse."

Both Jonkel and Butler issued statements after Jonkel's court appearance in which they charged efforts had been made by anti-Butler forces to discredit the Butler campaign.

Butler stated: "I am satisfied Mr. Jonkel is the victim of an effort to make me appear in an unfavorable light. I know that he had no intention whatsoever of violating any law, and I have the fullest faith in his integrity and ability."

Final Report

Although hearings were ended early in April, the Subcommittee did not produce a final report until Aug 3. The group received criticism from members of both parties for the delay.

The Subcommittee report was signed by Gillette, who did not take an active part in the investigation, Monroney, as acting chairman, and by Hennings. Mrs. Smith and Hendrickson. There was no dissent.

The report said Butler had been responsible for "two campaigns in one." One campaign was a dignified speaking tour of the state by Butler. The other, the "back street" campaign, was carried on by Jon M. Jonkel, who, the report said, had been given "blanket authority" by Butler to conduct it.

The report said: "The Maryland campaign was not just another campaign. It brought into sharp focus certain campaign tactics and practices that can best be characterized as destructive of fundamental American principles."

The alleged irregularities criticized were: The "big doubt" technique which the Subcommittee said was used to "create and exploit doubt of the patriotism of former Senator Tydings;" the composite picture showing Tydings apparently in close conversation with ex - Communist Earl Browder; campaign literature containing "unfounded attacks" on Tydings; illegal hiring of an out - of-state campaign manager; illegal handling of campaign funds; excessive campaign spending; use of false endorsements; and outside influences in the campaign.

The report said Sen. McCarthy and his staff were a "leading and potent force" in the campaign.

In declining to recommend that any action be taken against Butler or McCarthy, the report said:

"No specific standards of improper campaign conducts or acts have been set up as guideposts. Only the provisions of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act exist, and these deal principally with the financial phase of campaigning. Since no standards exist, it would be grossly unfair now to formulate those standards 'after the fact' for retroactive application and unseat Sen. Butler on the bases of those 'after the fact' formulated standards."

Committee Recommendations

The Subcommittee made these recommendations:

Set up Senate rules formulating procedures for contesting elections and specify that use of defamatory literature in a Senatorial campaign constitutes grounds for ouster proceedings.

Set up Senate rules establishing responsibility on the part of a candidate for the facts of his campaign aides.

Ban misleading composite pictures, voice recordings, etc.

Require individuals contributing more than $100 to a campaign to report their own contributions.

Make any Senator, regardless of whether he is a candidate in the election himself, subject to expulsion if he engages in any improper campaigning.

Study the role of anonymous national groups in state elections and determine if it would be practical to identify the groups during a campaign.

Revise the Federal Corrupt Practices Act to make campaign spending limitations more realistic and more enforceable.

Urge political parties to establish fair campaigning standards.

Ask the Justice Department to study the Committee hearings and reports for appropriate action.

Full Committee Approves

The full Senate Rules and Privileges Committee approved the report Aug. 8 on a 9-3 vote. The report was supported by Carl Hayden (D Ariz.), Chairman; Theodore Francis Green (D R.I.), Gillette, William Benton (D Conn.), Earle C. Clements (D Ky.), Monroney, Hennings, Hendrickson and Mrs. Smith.

Opposing the report were Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.), William E. Jenner (R Ind.) and McCarthy. Committee member Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., (R Mass.) was not present during the vote.

McCarthy attacked the report as a "smear." He also filed his views on the investigation Aug. 20. The issue in the 1950 Maryland elections, McCarthy said was "one of Communists in government." And the issue, he maintained, was met squarely by the Butler campaign.

McCarthy said the 1950 Tydings investigation into his (McCarthy's) charges of Communists in the State Department was a "whitewash" and shielded "disloyal persons" from exposure.

McCarthy's views differed on several points with the majority - approved report. McCarthy maintained:

It was proper for "outsiders" to take part in the Maryland campaign, as the issue was important to the whole nation.

The Washington Times - Herald and radio commentator Fulton Lewis Jr., were no more to be blamed for taking part in the campaign than the Washington Post or columnist Drew Pearson.

Maryland voters had a free choice and overwhelmingly rejected Tydings.

The special Butler campaign tabloid was truthful.

The composite picture of ex-Communist leader Earl Browder and Tydings accurately showed the spirit of their "collaboration."

McCarthy also criticized Hendrickson and Mrs. Smith for taking part in the investigation and signing the majority report. He said their prior signature of the 1950 "Statement of Conscience" committed them on an issue "practically identical to the issue" before the Rules Committee. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, p. 452).

Senators Reply

Hendrickson replied on the Senate floor that the Declaration of Conscience had not been directed at McCarthy or at the charges before the Tydings Committee. "Probably I made some errors in approving some of the words and phrases in the report," Hendrickson said. "However, I cannot recall in my long public service, any act of a public nature which I performed with a clearer conscience."

"Opposition to communism," Mrs. Smith told the Senate, "is surely not the exclusive possession of the junior Senator from Wisconsin. Nor does differing with him on tactics automatically make one a Communist or a protector of communism."

She said the subject of her qualification for the Subcommittee should have been brought up before the investigation. She also questioned McCarthy's right, under his own standard, to file a minority report on the investigation.

Sen. Benton criticized McCarthy in a Senate speech Aug. 6. He said that in light of the report on the Butler election, McCarthy should resign from the Senate. Benton added that "a high percentage of the members of this body would resign forthwith if such a report were written about them."

Benton then introduced a resolution (S Res 187) directing the Rules Committee to make a further investigation into McCarthy's participation in the Butler campaign and into "his other acts since his election to the Senate." The Committee, under the resolution, then would decide whether explusion proceedings should be started against McCarthy.

The Benton Resolution started a long investigation of McCarthy by the Rules Committee. (See page 358.)

TAFT-FERGUSON

Background — In the November, 1950, Ohio Senatorial election, Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) defeated his Democratic opponent, Joseph T. Ferguson, state auditor, by 430,000 votes.

Final count was 1,645,653 for Taft and 1,214,459 for Ferguson.

Ferguson claimed the support of most organized labor in Ohio. Labor opposed Taft for his co - authorship of the Taft-Hartley Labor - Management Act. Taft campaigned on an anti - "Fair Deal" platform; Ferguson spoke for the Fair Deal.

After the election, both sides accused the other of using unfair campaign tactics and spending excessively large sums of money. The election was not formally contested. Chairman Gillette of the Senate Privileges and Elections Subcommittee said his group would look into the campaign.

A "preliminary" investigation was completed Oct. 27, according to Committee Counsel John T. Moore, and public hearings were scheduled for late in November.

Taft Leads Off

First witness was Taft, who took the stand Nov. 26. He summed up the campaign against him as "a sinister conspiracy designed to punish me for my legislative activities in the United States Senate."

He criticized campaign tactics of the American Federation of Labor, the Congress of Industrial Organizations, the CIO-Political Action Committee, the Railroad Brotherhoods, the United Mine Workers, the International Association of Machinists, the Democratic State organization and the "National Administration in Washington."

"Much of the activity," he said, "was directed right from the White House, and top Administration leaders were sent into Ohio to help defeat me."

He cited as unfair campaign literature a "Speaker's Handbook" prepared by the CIO-PAC "at great expense" and a comic book based on the Speaker's Handbook and containing material designed to arouse "class prejudice."

Taft said he didn't know exactly how much had been spent on his campaign, but after a discussion with Subcommittee members, he mentioned figures totaling about $600,000. Democratic spending, he estimated, was three times his own.

Chairman Gillette said the purpose of the hearings was to bring out facts which would help in the writing of possible "amendatory and remedial" election laws. He asked Taft for suggestions for better legislation.

Taft made the following recommendations:

Enforce existing laws.
Require that all election literature be filed with some public official before the election — but only for the record, not for censorship.
Explore possibilities of punishing direct misstatements of fact in a campaign.
Require reports on time spent by all persons working in the campaign.
Clarify existing campaign expenditures laws.

Ferguson Testifies

Ferguson testified Nov. 27. He disputed Taft's figures on spending, and placed his own campaign cost at $107,004. The figures, including some duplications, he said, broke down into $92,370 in personal expenditures and outlays by organizations set up to campaign for him; $32,858 by the CIO; $32,407 by the AFL; and $13,429 by other labor groups and committees.

Ferguson said Taft's campaign had cost about $5 million. He broke that estimate down into $1,204,355 spent by state-wide groups for Taft; $703,154 by county groups; $1.2 million for institutional advertising by companies and individuals and about $2 million for other activities, including literature distributed by medical associations and paid holidays given workers to attend Taft rallies.

He said he thought there was a "deal" between Taft and Democratic Governor Frank J. Lausche. "I think maybe the Republicans elected Lausche," he said, adding that Lausche carried many of the same precincts that Taft did.

Ferguson protested Taft's "political speeches" in Ohio schools. "I never asked to go into a school to make a political speech," he said. "There should be a law against it. The parents of the children are Democrats and Republicans and the children shouldn't be forced to listen to candidates."

Institutional advertising was used by companies to further Taft's campaign and "scare" voters away from Ferguson, the witness said. The ads did not mention candidates, Ferguson said, but were political ads supporting Taft.

Ferguson said Taft tried to tie Ferguson supporters to the Communists. Taft's charges that Gus Hall, a Communist, masterminded the campaign for Ferguson was "a deliberate lie and I think Mr. Taft knows it is a lie," Ferguson said.

Ferguson proposed a stiffer campaign expenditures law — one that would put a ceiling on all money a candidate could receive from all sources.

CIO Official Testifies

Jacob Clayman, secretary - treasurer of the Ohio CIO-PAC, told the Committee Nov. 27 that Ohio papers "gave a biased and completely loaded presentation" in favor of Taft. He said the Cincinnati Times-Star from Oct. 1 to Nov. 6, 1950, gave 1,058 inches to stories "friendly to Taft" and 36 3/4 inches to Ferguson.

Clayman recommended that Congress set up a permanent agency to police all federal elections and that election laws be amended to provide that "all individuals, organizations and committees report to the proper federal authorities . . . all expenditures, contemplated expenditures, commitments and contracts in excess of a reasonable sum."

Thomas E. Harris, CIO assistant general counsel, told the Subcommittee Nov. 29 that a Cleveland CIO local raised $250 for the PAC through a check-off of workers' pay. This, he said, was contrary to national CIO policy, although the check - off for such purposes was legal.

Paul Wexler, manager of the Weitz plant where the check-off was used, said there had been no objections to the contributions. Beryl Peppercorn, manager of the Cleveland Joint Board, Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America (CIO), said that when he learned the check-off had been used, he ordered the money returned to workers who requested it.

Phil Hannah, secretary - treasurer of the AFL Ohio State Federation of Labor, said Taft had advanced "utterly groundless" charges of Communist leadership in the Ferguson campaign.

Turned Over $100,000

Ben E. Tate, treasurer of the Taft-for-Senate Campaign Committee, testified Nov. 30 he turned over about $100,000 during the campaign to subsidiary groups without keeping records. He said he gave the money to such groups as the Advertising Committee for Taft and the Physicians Committee for Taft, with the expectation they would make all necessary reports of expenditures.

Tate said his Committee had a rule that "all funds over which we had any control should be carefully accounted for." He said a file was kept of the names and amounts of all contributors. The labor groups opposing Taft did not keep such complete records, Tate said.

Willis D. Gradison, Taft's 1950 campaign manager, testified Nov. 30 that the Taft campaign had cost not more than $500,000 to $700,000. At least $2 million, he said, was spent for Ferguson.

Rev. F. R. Stoneburner, superintendent of the Lutheran Inner Mission League of Southwestern Ohio, Southeastern Indiana and Northern Kentucky, told the Subcommittee he was the author of a letter circulated during the campaign which pointed out that Ferguson was a Catholic.

R. C. Owens, United Mine Workers official, said Dec. 1 he accepted campaign contributions for Ferguson on behalf of the Labor's Non - partisan League.

John P. Moore, counsel for tht Subcommittee, said Owens recieved $35,000 in checks signed by persons associated with Otis and Company, a Cleveland investment firm. Several contributors, Moore said, reported that they had been reimbursed by Cyrus S. Eaton, Sr., majority stockholder in Otis and Company. Eaton and his son both reported $5,000 contributions under their own names.

Ray C. Bliss, chairman of the Republican State Central and Executive Committee of Ohio, told the Subcommittee it was impossible to determine precisely what percentage of state GOP spending went for the Taft campaign.

Bliss said the Taft expenditures were "moderate," considering there were 5,150,000 persons of voting age in Ohio and that one mailing of campaign literature to each voter would cost $500,000.

Harry W. August, excutive director of the Ohio Republican Finance Committee, also described the GOP election campaigns in 1950.

Subcommittee member A. S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.) said after the Dec. 1 testimony that no plans had been made for a report on the Ohio investigation. He said the study was a part of the Subcommittee's general investigation of campaign tactics.

MONRONEY

Jo O. Ferguson, unsuccessful GOP gubernatorial candidate in Oklahoma, asked the Senate Elections Subcommittee to investigate the campaign of Sen. A. S. (Mike) Monroney (D Okla.)

Ferguson charged that campaign editions of an Oklahoma newspaper were mailed at regular second - class rates, but should have gone as "transient" second-class mail. The paper endorsed Monroney's campaign. He said that more than 964,000 copies were mailed at a cost of $800 - $900, whereas the cost should have been $9,647.

A Senate Elections Subcommittee reported March 30 that there was no evidence to support a charge of irregularities in the campaign of Sen. Monroney.

Chairman Gillette said "no improper action whatsoever" on the part of Monroney was found or was charged before the Subcommittee.

Two Republican Subcommittee members, Mrs. Hendrickson and Mrs. Smith agreed with Gillette's statement. Monroney, also a member, took no part in the inquiry. Hennings was away from Washington.

No further action was taken.

HANLEY LETTER

The Senate Elections Subcommittee investigated circumstances surrounding the writing of the "Hanley letter" which became a major issue in the 1950 Senatorial campaign in New York.

The letter was written Sept. 5, 1950, by former Lt. Gov. Joe R. Hanley to former Rep. W. Kingsland Macy (R N.Y.) Hanley had been a candidate for governor, but switched to the Senate race. Gov. Thomas E. Dewey became the GOP nominee for governor.

In the letter, Hanley said he had been assured a state job and an end to his financial troubles if he withdrew from the gubernatorial race in favor of Dewey. Hanley said he was in financial difficulties because of a bank stock debt that he inherited from his father, John R. Hanley, Muscatine, Iowa.

Hanley was defeated by Sen. Herbert H. Lehman (D-Lib. N.Y.), and then was appointed to a $16,000-a-year job as special counsel to the New York State Division of Veterans Affairs.

The American Labor Party lodged a complaint with the Gillette Subcommittee after the Hanley letter was made public Oct. 16, 1950, and the investigation followed. No formal hearings were held.

Finds No Creditor

The Subcommittee reported Jan. 3 that it was unable to find an Iowa creditor to whom Hanley reportedly paid a $150,000 debt.

The Subcommittee had a photographic copy of a cancelled note for $150,000 payable to C. C. Hagerman of Muscatine, Iowa, which Hanley purportedly signed.

The Gillette committee said the probate records of the clerk of the District Court of Muscatine County, Iowa, "do not show the ownership of stock of any kind by John R. Hanley, deceased." C. C. Hagerman of Muscatine, a schoolmate of the New Yorker, "evidenced complete surprise" when shown the copy of the cancelled note, and said he "had never known of the existence of such a note . . . and . . . he had never advanced any money to Joe R. Hanley."

Macy told the Gillette committee, the report said, that Frank Gannett, a newspaper publisher active in New York Republican politics, and the Bank of Manhattan had advanced $28,000 to Hanley to help him pay off his personal debts. Gannett said that he had loaned Hanley $19,000 for preconvention expenses.

The report was referred to the full Committee. No further action was taken.

HOUSE STUDY

The Special Committee to Investigate Campaign Expenditures, a group set up specifically to study the 1950 House elections, filed a report Jan. 3. The Committee reported it favored repeal of a number of provisions of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act and the Hatch Political Activities Act.

"It is patently impossible for a candidate to conduct a Congressional or Senatorial campaign" within the present limitation, $5,000 for a candidate for the House and $25,000 for a candidate for the Senate, the Committee said.

"It is manifestly absurd to think that a national campaign can be conducted" under the $3 million annual limitation on the national political committees "where the electorate is composed of better than 60 million eligible voters spread over an area of 3 million square miles," it reported.

The ceilings on campaign contributions and expenditures, being "unrealistic . . . are an invitation to criminal violation," it said, and recommended outright repeal of the national committee ceiling and "elimination or substantial increase" on the ceiling on Congressional candidates.

Among the other recommendations made by the committee were:

The term "election" should be extended to include primaries. "It is clearly absurd to exclude primary elections and Party conventions" in publicizing and regulating federal political financing, it said.

The term "political committee" should include all organizations which seek to influence the nomination or election of candidates for federal office. This would presumably require the "education" committees of labor unions, medical and management organizations, etc., to report political contributions and expenditures.

Political committees should be precluded from receiving contributions and making expenditures on behalf of candidates without written authorization of the candidate and public disclosure.

The prohibition against participation in elections by federal employees should be eliminated or modified.

Other recommendations touched on the abuse of franking privileges in campaigns, political contributions by individuals, authorization for the circulation of unsigned advertisements and circulations, and the question of seating successful candidates for Congress who willfully failed to comply with reporting requirements.

Ayres-Huber

Rep. William H. Ayres (R Ohio) defeated former Rep. Walter B. Huber (D Ohio) in the 1950 Congressional race in the Ohio 14th District. Huber contested the election, saying his name had not been rotated on the ballots as provided for in state election laws. Ayres said the election had been legal and proper.

The House Administration Committee Aug. 9 ruled that Ayres had been properly elected. A minority report released Aug. 16 said Huber would have received a "substantial plurality" if the Ohio election laws had been complied with. The minority report was signed by Wayne L. Hays (D Ohio), Charles R. Howell (D N.J.), Edward A. Garmatz (D Md.), Reva Beck Bosone (D Utah) and Victor L. Anfuso (D N.Y.)

Without debate, the House Aug. 21 approved on voice vote a resolution (H Res 400) confirming the election of Ayres.

Curtis-Karst

Former Rep. Raymond W. Karst (D Mo.) challenged the victory over him by Thomas B. Curtis (R Mo.) in Missouri's Twelfth Congressional district.

Karst later withdrew his protest and asked the House Administration Committee to dismiss the election contest. No testimony on the controversy had been taken.

The Committee recommended Aug. 9 that the contest be dismissed. The House Aug. 21 approved a resolution (H Res 399) dismissing the election contest against Curtis.

Davis-Lowe

The election of James C. Davis (D Ga.) in the Fifth Congressional District of Georgia was challenged by Wyman C. Lowe, who had sought the Democratic nomination in that district.

The House Administration Committee voted Aug. 9 to reject the contest bid on the grounds that Lowe had been in the primary election only and that the Committee's jurisdiction did not extend to the primary.

The House Aug. 21 approved on voice vote a resolution (H Res 398) dropping the charges of Lowe against Davis.

Brehm Conviction

Rep. Walter E. Brehm (R Ohio) was convicted in a Washington, D.C., Federal Court of violating the Federal Corrupt Practices Act and given a suspended five to 15 months jail sentence and fined $5,000. He appealed the conviction to the U.S. Court of Appeals.

Brehm, a five-term Congressman, Dec. 20 was indicted by a federal grand jury in Washington on seven counts of accepting a total of $1,380 in campaign contributions from women clerks in his office. He said he was innocent and welcomed a trial.

The indictment charged Brehm with accepting a total of $380 from Mrs. Clara Soliday in December, 1947, and February, 1948, "for the political purpose of assisting in the defendant's campaign for re-election," and a total of $1,000 on five dates in 1948 from Mrs. Emma S. Craven, who succeeded Mrs. Soliday in Brehm's office.

Brehm Jan. 22 asked a District Court at Washington to dismiss the indictment, declaring the language of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act "is vague, uncertain and indefinite."

Brehm's attorney filed the dismissal motion, stating that the Act "fails to establish an ascertainable standard of guilt, and the statutes accordingly are in violation of the Fifth and Sixth Amendments to the Constitution." The Fifth is the "due process of law" amendment and the Sixth covers the right of the defendant to "be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation."

The motion also contended that the grand jury which indicted Brehm was not "drawn, selected and impaneled in accordance with law."

A federal judge Feb. 20 rejected the motion.

Trial Opens

The trial opened April 17. Principal government witnesses were Mrs. Soliday and Mrs. Craven.

Mrs. Soliday testified April 18 that Brehm required her to turn over to him part of each of her pay checks from 1945 to 1948. Her testimony was challenged by defense attorneys on the grounds that she could not say for what purpose Brehm used the money. The indictments alleged that the money was used in Brehm's campaigns.

Mrs. Craven told the court April 19 that she gave Brehm $210 a month out of her salary during most of 1948. She said the Congressman told her the money would go to the "Republican war chest" and that he would not use it himself.

The trial continued April 23 when Mrs. Craven testified Brehm had offered to return money she had given him.

Mrs. Craven said Brehm made his offer shortly before he was indicted on "kick-back" charges, and asked her to sign a statement that she had received the money in 1949. Her testimony closed the government's presentation.

Brehm Defended

Testimony in Brehm's defense began April 24. An Ohio businessman, Sherman Lebold, praised him as being "the only person I've known as a Member of Congress who had a chance to receive money and returned it." Brehm himself denied taking money from Mrs. Craven. He said he did permit her to keep money for the National Republican Party Treasury in his file cabinet, and later returned the money to her.

Brehm also denied he had directly received contributions from Mrs. Soliday. He said she "hid" cash in his office. Mrs. Brehm corroborated his statement.

Sens. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) and John W. Bricker (R Ohio) and Reps. John W. McCormack (D Mass.), Joseph W. Martin, Jr., (R Mass.), Charles Halleck (R Ind.) and Michael A. Feighan (D Ohio) took the stand to praise Brehm's character. So did Father Charles Litzinger, a Dominican priest from Springfield, Ky. The defense then rested.

The government called three FBI officials April 26 to discuss Mrs. Brehm's testimony. Mrs. Brehm returned to the stand to clarify some details.

Judge Burnita S. Matthews, presiding in the District Court in Washington, refused to grant a directed verdict of acquittal.

Verdict: Guilty

Brehm was found guilty by the jury April 30 on five counts. He had been charged with taking five $200 payments from Mrs. Craven during five months of 1948 and with taking $240 from Mrs. Soliday on one occasion and $140 on another. The court, however, rejected the charge on a $240 kickback, saying it did not occur within the three-year statute of limitations. The jury acquitted him of a $140 kickback count.

Brehm May 4 asked for a new trial. His attorney charged that Judge Matthews had made errors in instructing the jury.

The motion was denied May 18.

The sentence was handed down June 11 — a $5,000 fine and a five to 15 months suspended sentence.

Judge Showed Mercy

Judge Matthews said she showed mercy toward Brehm because she believed he was unaware of the law forbidding his action when he violated it. But, she said, "such actions tend to demoralize public service and subject employees to intimidation." She said ignorance of the law is no excuse but ". . . the court may properly take into consideration whether the law was knowingly violated . . . in determining the kind and extent of the punishment to be imposed." Probation reports indicated that it was Brehm's first offense and that further violations were improbable, Judge Matthews held.

An appeal to the U.S. Court of Appeals was filed by Brehm Oct. 24.

Brehm's conviction did not affect his House membership, as the House did not take action to oust him. His attorney, Leo A. Rover, said Brehm would not yield his seat at least until all appeals to higher courts were exhausted.

War Surplus Sales

A House subcommittee in 1951 investigated the sales of surplus war property and concluded that "loose practices" in surplus disposal were costing the government money when it had to buy back property previously sold.

The investigating group was the Inter - Governmental Relations Subcommittee of the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. It was headed by Rep. Herbert C. Bonner (D N.C.)

Hearings

In studying reports of irregularities in sales of surplus military equipment to Germany, the group heard Secretary of the Army Frank Pace testify March 15 that some $1 million worth of Army equipment was sold at 21 cents on the dollar in 1947-48 to a German state corporation, STEG.

Chairman Bonner said a "ringleader" of persons buying the surplus from STEG and selling back to the Army at much higher prices was George Dawson, a Briton. Bonner said Dawson made "over $100 million in this business."

Dawson, in a statement from Paris, denied the allegation. Meanwhile, lawmakers established that he had figured in the 1949 Senate investigation of "five percenters." (CQ Almanac, Vol. V. 1949, p. 593.). John Maragon, a principal in that probe, had been described as "representing George Dawson and Co."

Dawson said March 17, 1951, he knew Maragon but had had no business dealings with him.

Profits From Trucks

A tale of big profits in the purchase and resale of surplus Army trucks to the government itself — without the payment of excise taxes — was unfolded April 4 before the Bonner Subcommittee.

Morris Green, a Chicago truck dealer whose concern made a $425,000 net profit on resale of 872 surplus trucks bought in the Philippines, said he had not been advised by counsel nor had he realized himself that excise taxes had to be paid on the transactions.

Max E. Hoyt, head of the Sales Tax Division of the Internal Revenue Bureau, testified that the five per cent federal excise tax applied to all surplus resold in the United States, even to the government, unless an excise tax had been paid when the goods originally were sold to the government. W. L. Ellis, chief of investigators in the General Accounting Office, testified that no such tax had been paid in the war years up to June 1, 1944, since materials sold to the government in that period were exempted.

Green revealed that the $425,000 net profit was earned on an investment by the Green Brothers Enterprises of about $600,000 or $700,000. He and his brother, Julius, who together owned a half interest, drew $85,000 each in profits while Edward Udelson, a Cleveland truck dealer who held the other half interest, got a $170,000 return.

Biggest Customer: AEC

The biggest customer for the Green Brothers' surplus trucks, Green said, was the Atomic Energy Commission, which bought 348 at prices ranging from $3,400 to $3,900. He reported he paid the Schnitzer Brothers Steel Company of Portland, Ore., a commission of $125,000 for finding this customer, and paid other fees and commissions in connection with the transactions totaling $154,000.

In a leter to the Senate - House Committee on Atomic Energy April 5, Gordon Dean, chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, confirmed Green's statements to the House Subcommittee and said the AEC saved more than $1 million by buying trucks from the Chicago truck dealer in 1948.

Another witness, Morris Klein, a Pittsburgh truck dealer, testified he had tried to work on a 12 to 14 per cent profit margin in the sale of $1,600,000 worth of Army surplus acquired in Germany.

The Army's Detroit tank arsenal was his best customer for surplus materials, Klein told the Subcommitee, and officers there not only knew they were buying government surplus but encouraged such deals.

Klein also said he had bought out surplus holdings of the American Auto Parts Company of Kansas City for $150,000, but these holdings, still in Europe, had been requisitioned by the U.S. Government.

Next the Subcommittee heard from Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer who invited the Bonner group to investigate his Department's approval in 1948 of a domestic transaction involving surplus Army trucks left in the Philippines.

Defends Federal Workers

At the same time, Sawyer criticized Congressional investigations that make every government worker look like "a knave or a fool." He stoutly defended government employees, who, he declared, "with only rare exceptions . . . are honest and competent and have a sincere desire to render public service."

Russell A. Heddleston, former War Assets Administration official, told the Bonner Subcommittee April 18 that he saw nothing irregular in accepting payments from a Michigan aircraft parts dealer for surplus property sent to an Indiana public school.

Heddleston was in charge of disposal of aircraft material to educational institutions for the agency from 1945 to 1947. The property in question first was acquired through Heddleston's office in the name of the Bunker Hill, Ind., Public School. It actually went to a private Bunker Hill air school. Heddleston said there was no requirement that the recipient of the surplus material pay for it.

The Subcommittee's investigation was touched off by a General Accounting Office report which said the Bunker Hill aeronautics school acquired for $11,909 surplus property which cost the government between $4 million and $7 million.

Maragon Testifies

Maragon, Washington man - about-town convicted on perjury charges growing out of the 1949 Senate "five percenter" investigation, related to the Subcommittee April 19 the story of a brief and unprofitable partnership with Dawson. High points of his testimony included allegations that:

Dawson and an "ex-convict" lieutenant, John van Allen, made "extensive" use of "to - whom - it - may-concern" letters bearing the signature of Sen. Kenneth McKellar (D Tenn.) Maragon said a secretary in McKellar's office told him "she executed the letters, and somebody signed them."

Dawson, who Maragon said was under suspicion by "the Scotland Yard," paid a "female employee" of the U.S. Embassy in Paris $500 to execute a visa hiding a previous arrest in England. Maragon testified Dawson obtained the visa to come to the United States to negotiate for surplus in 1948.

Gen. Clyde Hysong, officer in charge of foreign surplus liquidation in Paris in 1948, performed no favors for Maragon despite a letter from Maj. Gen. Harry Vaughan, White House military aide.

Maragon said he had been a one-quarter partner with Dawson in the Transamerica Trading Company in 1948 but he said when the arrangement had cost him $2,700 out of his own pocket and given him no return he cut loose from Dawson and his Paris "racketeers."

Report

In a report June 27 on federal supply management in military and related activities, the Subcommittee concluded, "There is no justification for disposing of usable property at a fraction of its value, when great quantities of the same or similar items are being purchased in other government activities."

Citing evidence of such practices, the Subcommittee recommended "improved standards for screening as to what constitutes salvage, as well as more exact standards for determining replacement of military equipment."

Building "Sales" Hearings

As part of its continuing study of influence in government procurement, the Senate Investigations Subcommittee reported Aug. 2 to the Senate on activities of Samuel D. Mason, accused of obtaining money with promises to use his influence in Washington. Mason was indicted Aug. 14 on charges of perjury and larceny.

Sen. Clyde R. Hoey (D N.C.), chairman of the Subcommitee which is a branch of the Expenditures Committee, told the Senate the report was issued as a warning to the public. The July 19-20 hearings on Mason produced "one of the most fantastic stories ever told," he said.

Hoey said "gullible victims" were fleeced of at least $350,000. He added that he had no evidence that the man ever succeeded in getting the contracts or surplus property bargain leases that he promised his victims.

Those testifying included a Boston construction contractor who said he paid out $22,765, a Philadelphia couple who testified they made four payments of $7,800 each, and a New York priest of the Greek Catholic Church who said he and his colleagues turned over between $150,000 and $200,000. They hoped to get leases so they could make money needed for a new church and school, and a camp for poor children, he said.

Answering the charges, Mason told the Committee he worked through a mysterious friend, Eungart, who was temporarily in Australia. He said Eungart took the money and made the influential contacts. Mason said he didn't know Eungart's address and wasn't sure of his first name. Committee invesigators were unable to find any trace of Eungart.

Hoey said Mason led his victims to believe the government was constructing mammoth buildings underground, and thus many surface buildings would become surplus.

Dual Compensation

The House by a 238-53 roll-call vote (see page 402) Sept. 24, 1951, passed a bill (HR 4419) to permit public schools in the District of Columbia to employ up to 15 retired members of the armed forces as teachers of military science and tactics, and to allow such instructors to receive salaries in addition to their retired pay. The Senate did not act on the bill.

The House Committee on the District of Columbia favorably reported the bill Sept. 21, saying legislation was necessary because experienced and qualified men had been unwilling to serve as high school instructors while the Dual Compensation Act of 1933 prevented their being paid for their services. Rep. Joseph P. O'Hara (R Minn.) opposed the bill, saying the retired men would receive dual compensation. Rep. Clare E. Hoffman (R Mich.) proposed an amendment to the bill to prevent their receiving dual pay, but the House rejected the amendment.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

A. L. Miller (R Neb.) — Limit combined compensation from retirement pay and salary for retired members of armed services, to $6,000. Voice vote.

Miller — Limit to $45,000 the amount a school board may pay such employees. Voice.

Clare E. Hoffman (R Mich.) — Delete clause exempting such employees from dual compensation prohibitions. Voice.

Un-American Activities

Summary — Although the House Un - American Activities Committee conducted numerous investigations during 1951, the group concentrated on two major probes — Communist infiltration in Hollywood and the Red foothold in defense plant areas. Other probes concerned Communist activities in Hawaii, the Communist Party's National Farm Commission, and the Sorge spy ring. (For 1950 activities, see CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, pp. 432-4.)

A $200,000 grant to the Committee, for its 1951 investigations and general expenses, was voted by the House Feb. 2. Approval of the resolution (H Res 42) was by voice vote. It was sponsored by John S. Wood (D Ga.), Chairman of the Committee.

The work of the Un-American Activities Committee in some phases paralleled that of the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee (see page 375). Some of the same witnesses appeared before both groups in connection with an investigation of the Sorge spy ring which operated in Japan during World War II.

Hollywood Probe

An extensive investigation of possible Communist infiltration of Hollywood brought a parade of filmland figures — actors, writers, producers —before the Un - American Activities Committee during 1951. Although the group questioned dozens connected with the movie industry, only a few actually admitted former Communist party membership. Many of the witnesses refused to answer questions. Some flatly denied that they were ever Communists.

According to the testimony of admitted former Reds, the Communists infiltrated Hollywood for three main reasons: 1) To tap a lucrative source for party funds; 2) To lure "big names" into the front groups for prestige; 3) To bar anti-Communist films and disseminate pro-Communist propaganda through the control of films.

The House Committee launched its Hollywood probe March 21 and heard testimony from movie actors Larry Parks, Howard DiSilva and Gale Sondergaard. Parks said he belonged to the Communist party from 1941 to 1945 but DiSilva and Miss Sondergaard refused to answer on grounds that to do so might incriminate them.

Movie actor Sterling Hayden April 10 told of Communist membership from June to December of 1946 and called it "the stupidest and most ignorant thing I ever had done in my life." Hayden once was a Marine Corps captain, and won the Silver Star. He served in the Office of Strategic Services in World War II.

Screen writer Richard J. Collins April 12 said he once was a Communist Party member and named more than 20 other Hollywood figures as one-time party members in testimony before the Committee.

"Hollywood Ten"

Among those he named were Ring Lardner, Jr., Budd Schulberg, John Howard Lawson, V. J. Jerome, Lester Cole, Albert Maltz, and producer Robert Rossen. Lawson, Cole, Lardner and Maltz were members of the "Hollywood Ten" jailed in 1947 for contempt of the House Committee.

Collins said he was a Communist from 1938 until 1947.

Two other witnesses April 12 refused to say whether they had been Communists. They were Will Geer, stage and screen actor, and Robert Lees, film writer.

Victor Killian and Fred Grafe, actors, and Waldo Salt and Paul Jarrico, writers, appeared April 13, but declined to answer questions about possible Communist affiliations on grounds of possible self-incrimination.

Another witness, Mrs. Meta Reis Rosenberg, screen story editor, told the Committee she had been a Communist in 1945.

Anne Revere, actress, and Sam Moore and Harold Buchman, writers, April 17 refused to answer questions about alleged Communist activities on grounds of possible self-incrimination.

The Committee was told that nine Hollywood figures had "deliberately evaded" Committee agents who had tried to subpena them. Named were Karen Morley, actress; Jack Berry, director; Michael Uris, Georgia Backus Alexander, Fred Rinaldo, Hugo Butler and Leonardo Bercovici, writers, and Lew Solomon and Edward Huebsch.

Garfield Testifies

Actor John Garfield appeared April 23 to deny any links with communism. Garfield said he was a liberal and had never given any aid or sympathy to "Red" or "pink" groups; although, he said, some "front" groups had used his name without authorization.

Character actor Marc Lawrence told the Committee April 24 that he had been a Communist in 1938. He said he attended a few meetings out of curiosity, got "headaches" from the speeches and then quit. Character actor Morris Carnovsky and writers' agent George Willner also testified April 24, but refused to answer questions about alleged Communist affiliation, pleading possible self - incrimination.

Director Edward Dmytryk, who had been jailed for refusing to answer questions about communism put to him by the Committee in 1947, appeared voluntarily to testify April 25. He said he had been a Communist in 1944 and 1945 and then went on to explain the workings of the Party in the movie trade.

He said the Party sought to infiltrate Hollywood in order to insert propaganda into films and to raise money. It did not succeed in putting the party line in films, he said, but did collect large sums of money.

Dmytryk said he quit the party after being shocked by "thought control" tactics by party leaders.

Four other members of the movie colony testified May 16 and 17 but only one — screen writer Leonardo Bercovici — answered any of the questions on Communist affiliation. Bercovici said May 16 he was not then a Communist, but declined on grounds of possible self - incrimination, to answer questions about past associations.

Witnesses who refused, on similar grounds, to talk about their present or past affiliations were Miss Bea Winters and Alvin Hammer, testifying May 16, and Lloyd Gough, who testified May 17. Miss Winters formerly was a studio secretary and Hammer and Gough, actors.

Probe Unions' Battle

The Committee may 17 also began re-airing of a bitter union labor dispute between the International Alliance of Theatrical and Stage Employees (AFL) and the Conference of Studio Unions in 1946-47. It heard details of the union struggle in Hollywood from Roy Brewer, an officer of IATSE.

Brewer testified May 17 and 18. The Communists still have strong underground influence in Hollywood, Brewer said, but "the back of their power" has been broken. Brewer recounted events of the successful AFL fight to thwart what he called a Communist-led plan to win control of studio labor.

Jose Ferrer, 1950 motion picture Academy Award winner, blamed carelessness and ignorance for his inclusion on the sponsor lists of organizations considered to be subversive. He denied he was a Communist or a Communist sympathizer. Ferrer testified May 22 and was recalled May 25.

Schulberg, author of "What Makes Sammy Run" and "The Disenchanted", told the Committee May 23 that he became a Communist during the late 1930's but quit the party in 1939 when it tried to dictate what he should write. Another reason for breaking with it, he said, was its "quick switch to virtual alliance with Hitler."

'Monstrous Error'

Director Frank Wright Tuttle told the Committee May 24 that he was in the Communist Party from 1937 to 1947. He characterized the experience as "a monstrous error in judgment" and said it has cost him his job.

More than a month later, Robert Rossen, producer of "All the King's Men," told the Committee June 25 that he was not then a Party member, but he refused to say if he had been a member as recently as the previous day.

Actor J. Edward Bromberg, testifying June 26, refused to say whether he was or had been a Communist and refused to say whether he would fight for the United States in a war against Communist countries. Both men invoked their rights against self-incrimination in refusing to answer questions.

Probers "On Location"

A subcommittee of the Un-American Activities Committee carried the investigation to Hollywood September 17.

Leo Townsend, a screen writer who said he was a Communist party member from 1943-48, testified Sept. 18 that he didn't know of "any American Communist moving picture or of any with Communist propaganda." He said "the industry has been very careful about this."

At the peak of its influence in 1944, Townsend said, the Communist Party had about 50 members in the Screen Writers Guild, which had an active membership at that time of more than 150.

Another screen writer, Martin Berkeley, Sept. 19 gave the Subcommittee the names of more than 100 persons in Hollywood or Broadway theatre circles whom he identified as party members. His list included Victor Shapiro, a member of the Los Angeles County Democratic Central Committee, whom he said had "succeeded in living a double life." Prominent theatrical people named by Berkeley included Lillian Hellman, Dorothy Parker and Alan Campbell.

Berkeley said the party's main aim in Hollywood was to obtain money and big names in support of its causes.

He named John Howard Lawson, a writer, as the "grand poobah of the Communist Party in Hollywood at that time, and from that day to this."

Witnesses who refused to answer questions concerning their Communist Party affiliations, included Henry Blankfort, screen writer and associate producer; Howard Chamberlin, character actor; and Michael Gordon, director of the movie, "Cyrano de Bergerac." The latter declined to say whether he was a Communist Party member, but said he would defend the United States against Russia.

"Stopped Believing"

One who talked was Mrs. Elizabeth Wilson, writer of Western movies. She said Sept. 21 that she joined the Young Communist League in 1937 at the urging of Schulberg. The witness testified she quit in 1947, after she "stopped believing in the infinite good will and the will for peace of the Soviet Union."

Mrs. Wilson named several film figures as once active in party affairs. She said the Communists took over many Hollywood political organizations as tools.

George Beck, screen writer, told the Committee Sept. 25 he joined the Communist party in 1943 and withdrew in 1946 or 1947. Beck was one of those named by Mrs. Wilson.

Danny Dare, New York TV producer, appeared before the Committee in Washington Sept. 27 at his own request. He said he wanted to deny statements before the Committee by Martin Berkeley, that Dare had been a Communist.

The Subcommittee closed the Hollywood hearings Sept. 25.

Defense Areas

Another investigation undertaken by the Un-American Activities Committee in 1951 concerned Communist infiltration in defense plant areas. The group concentrated on the Baltimore, Md., and Boston, Mass., areas.

The probe was begun June 19 and initial witnesses, from the Baltimore area, refused to state whether they were Communists. They were Walter McManamon, former president of the Baltimore Industrial Union Council - (CIO) and an organizer for the CIO - ousted Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union, and Herbert Kransdorf, linked by the Committee with the National Maritime Union.

Amid talk of citing the two for contempt, the Committee heard more witnesses June 20. They were Irving Dvorin, New York City port agent for the Marine Cooks and Stewards Union (CIO); Milton Unterman, a New York high school teacher and former aircraft inspector in Baltimore; and Mike Howard, a steel worker at the Sparrows Point, Md., plant of the Bethlehem Steel Company.

These witnesses also refused to say if they were Communists. They declared the Committee's questions were designed to embarrass their unions. The procedure was repeated June 21 when the witnesses were Phil Gran and Joseph Henderson, of the Sparrows Point plant.

The Committee June 26 heard six witnesses from the Baltimore - Washington area who refused to answer some questions and cited their rights against self-incrimination.

The Committee June 28 decided to seek citation against two of the six for contempt of Congress. They were Oscar Roberts and Robert W. Lee. Roberts, Russian-born, wouldn't give his original name, and Lee wouldn't say if he had been employed by the government other than when he was in service.

The other witnesses June 26 were Levy Williamson, John Goodell, Louis Pearlmen and Peter Forrest. Appearing June 27 were Aaron Ostrofsky, Samuel Schmerler and Irving Kandel, all of Baltimore, who refused to answer questions about Communist affiliation.

Charges "Union-Busting"

Sam Fox of Baltimore, assistant business agent of Local 43, Marine Shipbuilding Workers Union, organizer for the United Furniture Workers (CIO), and former Progressive Party candidate for the U.S. Senate, refused June 28 to talk about his union. Fox charged the Committee with union-busting.

Max Weinstock, a business agent of Local 75, United Furniture Workers, also refused to answer. Walter Spiegel, operator of a Baltimore gift shop, told the Committee visitors to his home in the 1930's included a man who "looked very similar" to Whittaker Chambers. Spiegel said he never was a Communist Party member.

Mrs. Mary Stalcup Markward, a former undercover agent for the FBI, testified July 11 that Communists have sought in recent years to infiltrate basic industries and labor groups in Baltimore and Washington.

Mrs. Markward, a Virginia housewife, said she was recruited by the FBI in 1943 to be an undercover agent. She soon thereafter became a member, and later an official, of the Communist organization in Washington, and was expelled from the party in February, 1951.

She said Baltimore's steel industry was a prime target for the party, and that it was successful in getting party members into that industry. Other targets for party infiltration in the Washington - Baltimore area were the Baltimore waterfront and the Washington building trades, and labor groups in both communities, she testified.

Ober Law's Impact

After the passage of the State's Ober law in 1949 making membership in the party a felony in Maryland, the Communists "lessened their activity" in that state, Mrs. Markward testified.

She listed persons whom she knew as Communist members during the time she was reporting their activities to the FBI.

Meanwhile, Ruth Bleier, a physician, Harold Buckman, a lawyer, Louis Julius Shub, a music teacher, and Harold Round, a furniture finisher, all of Baltimore, refused to answer questions about their relations with several organizations which the Committee had been investigating, on the grounds that their answers might tend to incriminate them. Dr. Bleier and Buckman appeared before the Committee July 10; Shub and Round July 12.

Maurice Braverman of Baltimore, attorney for Round, also refused to answer questions of the Committee July 12.

Herbert A. Philbrick, a former undercover agent for the FBI, told the House Un-American Activities Committee July 23 that Communists undertook a postwar program to infiltrate industrial plants in the Boston area.

He named about 50 persons he had known as active in Communist activities. Four were called before the Committee but refused to answer most questions on grounds of possible self-incrimination. Two appeared July 24: Harry E. Winner, of Malden, Mass., and Dirk J. Struik, a mathematics professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. The other two, former defense plant workers, appeared Oct. 10-11: Donald C. Bollen, of Lynn, Mass., and Donald Tormey, of Beverly, Mass.

Hawaii Report

Testimony alleging links between the Communist party and the Hawaiian local of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union was released by the Committee July 31. The statements were those of Jack H. Kawano, who told the group in a closed session July 6 that he had been a local official in both the Union and the Communist party. He said union policy was influenced by Communists and named 47 persons he said were party members.

The Committee began investigating Communist activities in Hawaii in 1950.

Farm Commission

The Communist Party's National Farm Commission came under the scrutiny of the Committee Feb. 28 when the group queried the Commission's secretary, Lement Harris.

Harris, however, declined to answer key questions on grounds that he might incriminate himself. Harris said he had visited Russia twice to work on farms there and study agriculture. He said he had been active in Farm Holiday Associations in Nebraska, South Dakota, and Minnesota during the depression. The associations of farmers prevented attempts to foreclose mortgages. He also said he had been associated with the Farmers Union. He refused to answer any questions about whether Communists financed farmers' groups.

Harris testified again March 9 but he refused to answer questions about possible Communist activities.

Sorge Trial

Delving into the 1943 Richard Sorge spy trial in Japan, the House group questioned the suspended director of the State Department's Office of Chinese Affairs, O. Edmund Clubb, and Maj. Gen. C. A. Willoughby, Gen. Douglas A. MacArthur's chief intelligence officer.

Clubb was suspended from his State Department job June 27, pending a decision by the Departmental loyalty board. He told the Committee Aug. 20 that he had encountered Whittaker Chambers on a visit he made to the offices of New Masses, a Communist publication. In his diary, Clubb had referred to the publication as a "horrible rag."

The Committee produced two letters Aug. 23 linking Clubb with millionaire Frederick Vanderbilt Field. Clubb said he didn't question that the letters were genuine, but repeated earlier testimony that he met Field, longtime official of the IPR, only a very few times and in brief, casual contacts.

Willoughby told the House Committee Aug. 22 that, although the Richard Sorge spy ring operated primarily to Japan and China, "its methods showed a recognizable pattern that is working in the United States today."

On Aug. 23 Willoughby listed these seven Americans as active in the setup:

Albert Edward Stewart, Margaret Undjus and Judea Codkind, who he said, joined Russia's Far Eastern Bureau in 1930; Harold Isaacs, head of the Shanghai branch of the Noulens Defense Committee; Max and Grace Granich, publishers in 1936 and 1937 of The Voice of China newspaper; and John M. Murray, Shanghai correspondent for the Pacific News Agency.

Willoughby said the Noulens group was so successful at propaganda that it enlisted the support of such "sentimental Americans" as Sinclair Lewis, Floyd Bell, Theodore Dreiser, John Dos Passos, and Oswald Garrison Villard.

The Committee also questioned Japan's top investigating officer, Mitsusada Yoshikawa, Aug. 9. Yoshikawa, who was chief of the special investigating bureau of the Japanese Attorney General's office, said the Russians learned in 1941 of the Japanese plan to attack U. S. possessions through Sorge's spy ring.

Atomic Probes

Few investigations of atomic spying were held during 1951. The group questioned Dr. David Hawkins, a philosophy professor at the University of California, Jan. 27. Hawkins told the Committee that he was employed on an atomic project shortly after he left the Communist party in 1943. He was codifier of security regulations at the Los Alamos, N. M., atomic project, he said.

Dr. Joseph W. Weinberg, the "Scientist X" who figured in the Committee's atomic spying probe in 1949, was cleared of contempt of court charges May 17. They arose from a grand jury review of his case after the House Committee recommended that he be indicted for perjury. A U.S. District Judge ruled that Weinberg had a right to refuse to answer grand jury questions on grounds of possible self incrimination. (For story of Weinberg investigation, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, 1949, p. 597.)

REPORTS

In addition to releasing testimony of witnesses appearing before the Committee, the House group also issued several other publications during 1951.

A "Guide to Subversive Organizations and Publications," listing 624 organizations and 204 publications, was released March 7. The guide was a consolidation of organizations cited as Communist or Communist-front since the Committee was established in 1945.

In an April 5 report the Committee denounced the Communist "Peace Offensive" as "the most dangerous hoax ever devised by the international Communist conspiracy."

The 166-page Committee study of the campaign said it "has been designated a major effort of every Communist Party on the face of the globe." Fourteen international groups and 27 organizations in the United States were named as participants in the campaign.

The Committee called the peace campaign part of the Communist psychological warfare with aims to "secure moral sanction for its own aggressive designs, sap American morale and secure converts to treason", and to "develop a feeling of false security" among Americans.

Hundreds of prominent American musicians, actors, writers, physicists and artists were listed by the Committee as sponsors of the Scientific and Cultural Conference for World Peace which met in New York City in 1949. The House Committee said this conference was an early development of the peace offensive.

In another report released Jan. 29, the group said that the Honolulu weekly, the Hawaii Record, was "a front for the Communist Party despite the fact that the paper does not make this admission." The paper, it added, depended on support from "deluded liberals."

Internal Security Investigations

Summary — The new Internal Security Subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee early in February launched an investigation into various phases of national security, placing particular emphasis on the Institute of Pacific Relations and its possible subversive influence on U.S. policies in the Far East. The subcommittee, headed by Pat McCarran (D Nev.), also dealt with subversive infiltration in the telegraph industry and labor groups, Communist personnel in the government, and subversive aliens.

The IPR, an organization devoted to the study of Far Eastern affairs, had been accused of being a Communist tool instrumental in shaping U.S. Far East policies that were detrimental to this country.

The list of witnesses at the extensive IPR hearings ran the gamut from the high government officials to admitted ex-Communist spies. Among well - known figures to testify were Henry A. Wallace, former U.S. vice president; Harold E. Stassen, former Minnesota governor and later president of the University of Pennsylvania; Whittaker Chambers, admitted ex-Communist courier and accuser of convicted perjurer Alger Hiss; and Louis Budenz, admitted ex - Communist. Many other names were linked to the testimony.

Files Seized

Initial action of the Subcommittee was a "raid" on a New England barn that yielded thousands of papers relating to correspondence of the Institute.

After spending weeks making a detailed examination of the seized files, the Subcommittee began hearings that lasted well into October. On Nov. 1 McCarran announced that the IPR investigation still was far from completed. He said that any person whose "personal or professional opinion or action has been the subject of testimony shall have a chance to reply, under oath and on the record."

Other Subcommittee functions, which had been concurrent with the IPR probe, also were extended.

The Subcommiltee's work was authorized by a resolution approved in the 81st Congress. Work of the new group got underway in 1951 when the Senate granted $85,000 for the investigation. Later, on Sept. 27, the Senate added another $113,000 and extended the group's life until June 30, 1952.

One aspect of the McCarran group's investigation also was covered by the House Un-American Activities Commitee, when both groups heard witnesses on the wartime Sorge spy ring. (See page 374.)

Hearings

Owen Lattimore, Johns Hopkins University Professor, was among the first IPR probe witnesses. He appeared July 13 and after the closed session, told the press that the Institute "never has been Communist-dominated and never has been a Communist front." Mrs. Lattimore also testified.

Lattimore appeared as an IPR trustee and former editor of the IPR magazine, "Pacific Affairs." He figured in charges of Communist influence in the State Department made in 1950 by Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis.) (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, pg. 445.)

Edward C. Carter of New York, trustee of the IPR and its former secretary general, told the Subcommittee July 25 that he had tried to help Frederick Vanderbilt Field, often linked with Communist activities, get a commission in an intelligence post because he felt Field had "assets" that would have been useful to the United States.

XUM

Later, he became aware that Field was "aiding Communist causes," he testified, but added that he was "never able actually to prove he (Field) was a Communist member." Carter called Field a "sugar daddy" for the IPR who had "made up the deficit in the IPR's American section for a number of years."

Field, serving a contempt of court sentence for refusing to tell a New York grand jury who supplied bail for four fugitive Communists, July 26 refused to answer similar questions put to him by the Subcommittee. His refusal was based on grounds of possible self-incrimination. Field was released from jail to appear before the group.

He said he first became associated with the IPR in 1928, had served for many years in a number of official capacities in the group, and was still a dues-paying member.

He also testified that he resigned as a foreign agent for the Bank of China in January, 1951, because of the "changed international situation."

Russian General

A former Russian general, once active in Soviet intelligence work, told the Subcommittee July 31 that Lattimore and Joseph Barnes had been referred to as "our men" by the Soviet intelligence chief.

The witness, Alexander Gregory Barmine, chief of the Russian desk on the State Department's Voice of America program, said the reference was made in 1933 by Gen. Jan Birzin. Lattimore and Barnes were then officials in the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Barmine said that five years after Birzin's statement, he heard another reference to Lattimore and Barnes. In Paris, Gen. Walter G. Krivitsky told Barmine that Lattimore and Barnes were "still our men." Barmine and Krivitsky were fellow refugees from a Soviet purge.

(Lattimore Aug. 1 issued a statement calling Barmine's testimony "one of the flimsiest yarns I ever heard."

(Barnes, once foreign editor of the New York Herald Tribune, and at the time of the hearings an editor for Simon & Schuster, denied Barmine's testimony and said he had never been a Communist.)

Discussing the IPR, Barmine told the Senators the Institute was considered by the Russians as "an ideal cover for work to gather military intelligence."

Krivitsky in 1938 described the operation as "very successful, flourishing," Barmine said.

Tell of IPR Connections

The Subcommittee Aug. 7 heard two University of Washington faculty members, Dr. Karl A. Wittfogel and Prof. George Edward Taylor, describe connections with the IPR.

A former German Communist who said he broke with communism in 1939, Wittfogel testified that several IPR personnel either were Communists or had Communist connections.

Describing many contacts with Lattimore during the last 15 years, Wittfogel avoided a flat answer as to whether Lattimore was a Communist.

(Lattimore called Wittifogel's testimony "confused and self - contradictory.")

Prof. Taylor, a trustee of the IPR since 1945, said the research group "has done a very great deal in the Far Eastern field" and that he hoped "it will survive and be useful again." He said the danger of Communist infiltration was everywhere.

Spy Ring Report

An Army intelligence chief told the Subcommittee Aug. 9 that he was overruled in 1949 when he attempted to release a report on a Russian spy ring.

Maj. Gen. Charles A. Willoughby, Far Eastern intelligence chief under Gen. Douglas A. MacArthur, said the report concerned a pre-World War II spy ring in Japan headed by Richard Sorge, once a press attache in the German Embassy in Tokyo.

Questioned by Sen. Homer Ferguson (R Mich.), the general said he saw nothing dangerous to U. S. security in publication of the report in 1949, or later. He said "the best American legal talent in Tokyo" approved the report as proper evidence.

Willoughby said his legal team found evidence that two writers, Gunther Stein and the late Agnes Smedley, were "knowingly connected with the Sorge spy ring," and that both "are Communists." The Subcommittee's counsel, Robert Morris, introduced IPR documents seized by the Subcommittee in February, 1951, as evidence of connections between the IPR and Stein and Miss Smedley. They included a cable from Stein in 1942 accepting a temporary offer as an IPR correspondent, and some IPR correspondence in 1939 and 1942 which mentioned Miss Smedley.

The former intelligence chief said Miss Smedley conducted a "smear campaign" against the spy report in 1949, and that it had been suppressed by the Secretary of War's office, then under Kenneth Royall, as a result.

As the Subcommittee intensified its probe of the IPR it heard Whittaker Chambers, confessed former courier for Russian spies who first named Alger Hiss as a Soviet agent, and Elizabeth Bentley, admitted ex - Communist spy who also figured in the Hiss trial.

Miss Bentley testified Aug. 14 that Jacob Golos, whom she said was her spy boss, told her the IPR was "red as a rose" and that she "shouldn't touch it with a 10-foot pole. It was far too bungling and far too dangerous" for good undercover work.

Miss Bentley also said that former Treasury Undersecretary Harry Dexter White was used by Communists to sell Treasury Secretary Henry J. Morgenthau on a plan to deindustrialize Germany after the war. She named White and Lauchlin Currie, a White House administrative assistant under President Roosevelt, as two officials valuable to espionage workers. She said she did not know that either was a card - carrying Communist. Currie, she said, was an adviser to IPR.

Others she named included Field and Michael Greenberg, an assistant to Currie, whom Miss Bentley said provided information to the spy ring. Greenberg was once editor of an IPR bulletin.

Others testifying were Edward C. Carter, who had addressed the Subcommitee previously, and William M. Canning, Cincinnati, a self - described ex-Communist.

Chambers Testimony

Chambers testified Aug. 16 that J. Peters, Hungarian - born Communist leader who fled the U.S. several years ago, once told him Barnes and Field were members of the Red underground.

Chambers, who identified himself as a writer and stock farmer near Westminster, Md., also named the following as once having Communist sympathy and connections:

Laurence Duggan, State Department employee who plunged to death from a New York office building.

Noel Field, who apparently fled to Communist nations.

Former Undersecretary of the Treasury White.

The Committee said it had identified Duggan and White as having an "extensive association" with IPR.

Chairman McCarran said that he allowed all of Chamber's testimony before the Subcommittee Aug. 16 to go into the record, because hearsay evidence could be used, since "a conspiracy has been shown."

Sorge Ring

Two other key witnesses heard by the Subcommittee were Mitsusada Yoshikawa, Japanese investigator, and Louis Budenz, former editor of the Daily Worker.

Yoshikawa told the Senate Subcommittee Aug. 21 that the leader of the Soviet spy ring in Japan prior to World War II, Richard Sorge, had named Agnes Smedley as one of the U.S. members of the group. Miss Smedley's name was linked to the IPR in earlier testimony. The Japanese special investigator also said that Kaukaza Saionju, who was secretary of the Japanese Council of the IPR, gave many "state secrets" to the spy ring.

Budenz testified Aug. 22 that the IPR was a "captive organization completely under the control of the Communist Party." He added that the Far Eastern research group was known as "the little red school house" at the time he was a Communist leader.

Reiterating charges he made against Lattimore before the Tydings Subcommittee in 1950 (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI., 1950, p. 444), Budenz said he knew Lattimore both as a Communist and as a member of a red cell in the IPR.

(Lattimore replied in a statement that "Budenz seems to have told a new lie about me . . . he now says he heard my name mentioned in 1937 as a member of a Communist cell." Denying that he was even in the country at that time, Lattimore added: "I have already testified under oath that I am not and never have been a Communist, and I am prepared to do so again.")

Others Budenz described as having connections with the IPR and who he said also were Communists included Israel Epstein, writer on China; Maxwell S. Stewart, whom Budenz described as an editor of The Nation magazine and of IPR pamphlets; and the late Gen. Evans F. Carlson, of the Marine Corps.

Budenz said Aug. 23 that Communists had attempted to influence U.S. policy in the Far East, "with successes on a number of occasions". He claimed that a 1942 article in the Daily Worker was written "through arrangement" with the then White House Aide Lauchlin Currie. (Currie, at the time of the hearings an Economic Adviser to the Columbian government, repeatedly denied any Communist connections.)

Policy Was Revised

Eugene H. Dooman told the Subcommitee Sept. 14 that after Dean Acheson became an Undersecretary in the State Department in 1945, policy directives to American occupation authorities in Japan were revised to bring about the destruction of the Japanese capitalist class. He said the revision was in line with Communist objectives. Dooman, who had a long career in the State Department beginning in 1912, retired in August, 1945.

At the time he was head of the Far East Subcommittee of the State-War-Navy Coordinating Committee which was concerned primarily with formulating postwar occupation policies for Germany.

Joseph Z. Kornfeder, Detroit, testified Sept. 20 that he had been a Communist for many years. In 1932, he said, Earl Browder, former American Communist leader, had told him that the IPR contained "important contacts" for the party. Browder, according to Kornfeder, said the party would try to make the IPR a Communist front organization.

Kenneth W. Colegrove, Northwestern University professor and former IPR member, told the Subcommittee Sept. 25 that Dr. Philip C. Jessup, U.S. Ambassador-at-Large, and Lattimore had paralleled the Communist line at times in the past.

Colegrove said that at a State Department conference in 1949 Lattimore had led a "pro - Communist" faction in a discussion of Far East policy. Harold E. Stassen, President of the University of Pennsylvania and former Governor of Minnesota, Colegrove said, headed the "pro-American" group. Jessup, according to Colegrove, took no side at the conference although he was "following the Communist line" in speeches in the UN in December, 1948, and January, 1949.

Criticizes White Paper

The witness also criticized the State Department White Paper on China as a "lie" and a one-sided report.

A former secretary of the American Council of the IPR, Raymond Dennett, testified Sept. 26. He said that Mrs. Lattimore had "ghost written" a pamphlet for Henry Wallace in 1944 which was published by the IPR.

Dennett also commented on a series of pamphlets, sponsored by the IPR and distributed in schools and in the Armed Forces. Dennett said a pamphlet on Russia was not objective, that in it "facts are interpreted most favorably to the Soviet."

Dennett said he would not be willing to "brand" any IPR members as Communists, but added that he had suspicions about Frederick Vanderbilt Field.

On Sept. 28, the Subcommittee heard Dr. William M. McGovern, a Northwestern University professor, testify that the publicized recommendations made by former Vice President Wallace after a 1944 mission to China were "definitely not anti-Communist." He said Wallace's recommendation for the replacement of Gen. Joseph Stilwell with Lt. Gen. Albert C. Wedemeyer came at a time when Wedemeyer's views on communism were not known and when many people "thought he might go along with the Communists."

Stassen testified Oct. 1 that until the outbreak of the Korean war the State Department's Far Eastern policies were along the line advocated by Lattimore.

1949 Discussions

He listed Lattimore and Lawrence K. Rosinger, a member of the IPR, as leaders of a group present at a 1949 round table discussion which the State Department arranged to get the views of outsiders on Far Eastern policies.

Stassen, himself one of the "outsiders" called to the conference, said the Lattimore - Rosinger group advocated recognition of Communist China, cessation the aid to Nationalist China then being furnished by the U.S., and abandonment of Formosa to the Communists.

Stassen also quoted Ambassador-at-Large Jessup, another conference participant, as telling him at the time that he felt the "greater logic" was on the side of the argument advanced by Lattimore and his followers. For himself, Stassen said he was opposed from the beginning to what he called the "Lattimore policy."

At the time of the conference, Stassen said, there was no indication of how the State Department felt about their proposals. But he added that in succeeding weeks there was "much evidence" that the U.S. was proceeding "to implement the Lattimore program."

He later learned from the late Sen. Arthur H. Vandenberg (R Mich.), the Minnesotan testified, that Secretary of State Acheson and Jessup had recommended that all military supplies in shipment to China be "dramatically stopped as a move to world peace." He said Vandenberg told him the recommendation was made at a White House conference, that Vandenberg had "vigorously opposed" the idea and told President Truman he could muster a majority in the Senate to block it. Vandenberg told him that Mr. Truman then abandoned the idea.

The State Department promptly responded to the Stassen testimony of Oct. 1 with the announcement that after an "exhaustive search" of the Department records it had failed to find any evidence of the 1949 White House conference Stassen referred to. It added that Stassen's memory was "playing him tricks."

Department's Version

But on Oct. 3 the Department reversed itself and acknowledged there was such a White House conference, but it said many of Stassen's details were "erroneous." Jessup, for one, it said, was not there. The conference was held in February, 1949, and attended by Congressional leaders who objected to a proposal by Maj. Gen. David S. Barr, senior U.S. representative in China, that United States arms aid to the Chinese Nationalists be halted temporarily. It said the proposal was later turned down by the President.

Lattimore, meantime, asked for a release of the transcript of the conference. He said it would show he had not "unqualifiedly" advocated recognition of Red China but that other "reasonable, loyal and sensible people" at the conference, including businessmen, had.

Budenz testified Oct. 5 that Wallace had followed the Communist Party line in 1944 "whether he knew it or not." He said that Wallace's cabled reports to the late President Roosevelt criticizing Chiang Kaishek coincided with the party line.

The Subcommittee heard testimony Oct. 10 from William L. Holland, secretary general of IPR, who said that the IPR "specifically denies the untrue and insulting allegation that its policies have been secretly determined by the Communist Party or any other political group."

In New York City Oct. 10, Gerard Swope, ex-president of the General Electric Company, and chairman of the American branch of IPR, said the Internal Security Subcommittee was unfairly condemning the research group "on the unsubstantiated allegations of discredited ex-Communists."

Wallace Appears

Former Vice President Wallace Oct. 17 told the Subcommittee that ex-Communist Budenz was guilty of "grave slander and unmitigated gall" in saying he (Wallace) had made Communist-line recommendations after a 1944 mission to China.

Budenz had testified he heard in party circles that John Carter Vincent, a State Department career diplomat, and Lattimore, then an official of the Office of War Information, were Communists and would "guide" Wallace's report along Communist lines. Wallace said his recommendations, if promptly followed, would have been "most harmful to the Communist cause in China."

Joseph Alsop, newspaper columnist, told the Subcommittee Oct. 18 that Budenz "was guilty of three untruths" when he had testified about Wallace's China mission. The untruths, he said, were the statements that the Wallace mission carried out Communist objectives; that Vincent guided Wallace along these lines, and that Vincent was a Communist.

Wallace's recommendation that Gen. Stilwell be replaced by Gen. Wedemeyer, Alsop said, was the exact contrary of the Communist line at the time. Stilwell, according to Alsop, had been a great help to the Chinese Communists.

Chairman McCarran, ill in Reno, issued a statement from his Washington office warning against "premature judgment" in the investigation. "Any person whose personal or professional opinion or action has been the subject of testimony shall have a chance to reply, under oath and on the record," he said, adding that "we should withhold judgment."

Report on Unions

Turning to another phase of his Subcommittee's study of internal security, McCarran introduced a bill (S 1975) Aug. 9 which would prevent Communists or members of "front" organizations from becoming officers or representatives of labor groups. Introduction of the bill followed the release of McCarran's progress report on "Subversive Infiltration in the Telegraph Industry" Aug. 5.

The report charged that American Communication Association members, expelled from the CIO for following the Communist line, still had access to secret defense and diplomatic messages.

Call Diplomat Spy

Turning to subversive aliens, Senators on the Internal Security Subcommittee said Nov. 8 an alleged Communist spy was allowed to harvest a crop of U. S. military secrets for more than two years while acting as a Czechoslovakian diplomat in Washington.

Sen. Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md.) of the Subcommittee charged that Col. Otto Biheler, military and air attache at the Czech Embassy, was a "key figure in the Communist espionage apparatus." The legislator added that the State Department failed to expel Col. Biheler even after information as to his activities was provided by intelligence agencies.

According to the Subcommittee report, Col. Biheler came to the U.S. in 1948 and was called back to Czechoslovakia in February, 1951. O'Conor said Biheler's visa would let him return to the United States until February, 1952.

Sharp criticism was hurled at the State and Justice Departments by McCarran in a statement issued with O'Conor's report.

The State Department Nov. 11 denied charges of the two Senators. It said it was never asked by any government agency to expel Biheler. It admitted, however, that questionable reports about Biheler had been received from outside this country.

Decentralization

A bill (S 2251) to shift at least 50,000 federal jobs outside a 150 - mile radius of the White House was passed by the Senate Oct. 19, but did not receive House action in 1951. The compulsory decentralization program would be worked out by the President and the General Services Administrator, and the move completed over a three-year period.

President Truman first proposed decentralization in 1950, and again in his budget message Jan. 15, 1951. An over-all program of decentralization and dispersal was recommended by the Budget Bureau in a report dated March 7.

Provisions — The decentralization bill (S 2251) passed by the Senate would:

Direct the General Services Administrator to transfer permanently, over a three-year period, not less than 50,000 positions located within 20 miles of the White House, to sites more than 150 miles from it.

Permit the General Services Administrator, without obtaining permission, to transfer from within the 20-mile radius to locations within the 150-mile radius, groups of less than 50 permanent positions within one executive agency; but in the case of groups having more than 50 positions, require the prior approval of the Senate and House Committees on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

Demolish temporary buildings within the 20-mile area as vacated.

SENATE

A proposal for decentralization of 25,000 non-vital federal jobs was included in a "dispersal" bill (S 218) shelved by a 45-39 roll-call vote of the Senate April 23. Before it was shelved the Senate had accepted by voice vote an amendment by Harry P. Cain (R Wash.) to make the decentralization provision mandatory. Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.) offered another amendment to suspend the dispersal feature and concentrate upon decentralization, but his amendment did not come to a vote because a motion to recommit the bill, offered by Sen. Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.) took precedence.

The next day, April 24, the decentralization section of the shelved bill was introduced as a separate bill (S 1375) by Henry C. Dworshak (R Idaho), who had argued that the primary purpose of the dispersal bill was to make space for more employees in Washington. Dworshak's bill was referred to the Senate Committee on Public Works, which handled S 218.

On June 8 Sens. John L. McClellan (D Ark.), Dworshak, and Thomas C. Hennings (D Mo.), introduced a bill (S 1623) to transfer not less than 50,000 federal employees from Washington to locations around the country. This bill was ordered to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, which held a hearing July 24. Jess Larson, General Services Administrator, testified in favor of the move.

The Committee on Oct. 11 favorably reported its own bill (S 2251) as a substitute (for S 1623). In presenting the Committee report, Chairman McClellan said it aimed at ultimate permanent decentralization of federal personnel.

The Senate passed S 2251 on call of calendar, without objection, Oct. 19.

House

The bill was referred to the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments Oct. 20, but since the first session ended that day no action was taken. Subcommittee Chairman Chet Holifield (D Cal.) predicted on Oct. 22 that the group would approve a decentralization bill early in 1952.

Dispersal

S 218, HR 1728

Summary — The Senate voted April 23, 1951, to shelve a much-disputed bill (S 218) designed to move 20,000 federal employees from the District of Columbia to nearby Maryland and Virginia, and 25,000 to a greater distance, to ensure continuity of vital government activities in event of atomic attack upon Washington. The vote was 45 to 39. (See page 399.)

Technically, the bill was not dead, since the vote came on a motion by Sen. Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.) to recommit the measure to the Public Works Committee for "further study."

Dirksen and Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) rallied much of the opposition (proponents of recommital), which consisted of 35 Republicans and nine Democrats. Sens. Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) and Francis Case (R S.D.) led the bill's supporters, 34 Democrats and five Republicans.

The House Public Works Committee conducted hearings on a companion bill (HR 1728) introduced Jan. 19 by Rep. Charles A. Buckley (D N.Y.), but did not report it.

Background — In August, 1950, President Truman asked Congress for an appropriation of $139.8 million to start dispersal of government agencies to minimize damage to operations of the government in case of an attack. The Appropriations Committees voted against providing the funds, and attempts in 1950 to authorize dispersal were unsuccessful. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, p. 430)

In his 1951 budget message Jan. 15 the President asked $164 million for dispersal. A bill Sen. Dennis Chavez (D N.M.) introduced Jan. 8 (S 218) would have authorized $190 million for the purpose.

Provisions — As approved by the Senate Public Works Committee, the bill would:

Disperse to four appointed sites about 20 miles distant from the District of Columbia of 20,000 federal employees and authorize construction of four permanent office buildings on those sites.

Provide for demolition of temporary frame structures in Washington used to house 31,000 employees.

Authorize decentralization of 25,000 non-vital federal jobs to places far distant from Washington.

Establish a joint Congressional committee on dispersal, demolition and decentralization to study and review the programs.

Authorize $107 million for the sites and buildings for the 20,000 employees to be relocated near Washington.

SENATE

Committee

Civilian Defense Administrator Millard F. Caldwell testified before the Senate Public Works Committee Jan. 19 in support of the proposal to disperse key federal agencies to reduce their "target attractiveness" in event of air attack.

W. E. Reynolds, Commissioner of the Public Buildings Service, also favoring the bill, said some of the workers could be moved into new buildings constructed under the program "within this calendar year."

Officials of the Atomic Energy Commission, Bureau of the Budget and the Defense Department testified in closed session.

The Committee reported the bill in an amended form on April 11. The Committee vote favoring it was 9-1, with Sen. Edward Martin (R Pa.) the lone dissenter.

Floor Action

The bill (S 218) came up for Senate consideration April 18. Then Sen. Holland said the measure was necessary because "There is no need to argue the undoubted fact that Russia would not hestitate to drop atomic bombs on Washington."

He added that an A-bomb could "by almost one blow render the nation helpless." Holland said the Public Works Committee had been assured in secret session that Russia had sufficient atomic bombs for such an attack and had the planes to deliver the bombs.

John J. Williams (R Del.) attacked the bill on grounds of economy. He said it would be cheaper and more effective "to close up some of these government agencies and let the people go home and stay."

Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) said he felt the dispersal program was "just an excuse to build four more government buildings." He contended it would be better to spend the money on highways so people could "get in and out of the city in case of attack."

Again on April 23, much of the opposition was in the name of economy. Harry P. Cain (R Wash.), however, advocated an alternate capital as the only safeguard against government disruption by atomic attack and said such plans should be laid at once.

Henry C. Dworshak (R Idaho) maintained the only way to relieve the government congestion in Washington was to stop the influx of federal workers which he said reached a rate of about 5,000 a month.

Sees "Dubious Value"

Dirksen argued the bill would give "very dubious value" for the $107 million it authorized. He said the buildings could not be constructed for at least a year and that the Public Works Committee ought to look into the problems some more.

On another tack, Byrd told the Senate he was sure the program eventually would cost at least $500 million and would "not in any way protect the people of Washington from being bombed." He complained that "just as soon as you take these people out of Washington, they are going to put a lot more here."

Martin said office sites 20 miles outside Washington would not be far enough away to achieve the desired purpose.

Holland insisted atomic experts believed the 20-mile dispersal would provide adequate protection from any bomb now known or likely to be made. He said defeat of the bill would leave 31,000 employees in flimsy working quarters which he called "fire traps" and "death traps" in event bombs fell.

Brien McMahon (D Conn.) said "those who are urging us to make all-out war in China seem to be unaware of the fact that they (the Russians) can attack us right here in Washington." Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) said subversive lists of the Federal Bureau of Investigation were located in downtown Washington and might be destroyed in an atomic attack, when they were needed most.

Majority Leader Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.) said that if "those who talk about economy" were going to "take the position we're not in emergency (they) should talk about cutting off the $41 billion we're appropriating for the defense of America."

Sen. Cain offered an amendment to make mandatory the provision for decentralization of 25,000 federal positions. It was accepted by voice vote. Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.) offered an amendment designed to postpone the dispersal aspects of the bill and concentrate upon decentralization and demolition. His motion did not come to a vote, however, because Sen. Dirksen, at this point, moved to recommit the bill. This motion took precedence over the Johnson amendment.

The motion to recommit was accepted by a roll-call vote of 45-39, and the dispersal measure went back to committee.

Though the setback did not necessarily mean the bill's end, Holland said there might be no further effort unless a more serious crisis developed. "It is clear we must wait until the Republicans find out such a thing as an atomic bomb exists," he said.

The Senate took no further action on dispersal, but on Oct. 19 passed a bil (S 2251) for decentralization of 50,000 federal jobs (see page 379.)

HOUSE

The House companion bill (HR 1728) was introduced Jan. 19 by Rep. Charles A. Buckley (D N. Y.). At hearings before the Public Works Committee, Roger W. Jones, Bureau of the Budget, on Feb. 5 explained the Bureau's plan to move several agencies with 40,000 employes into six or eight new buildings in Maryland and Virginia within a radius of 20 miles from the Capitol. This, he said, would make Washington a less likely atom-bomb target in case of war.

Ramsay D. Potts, National Security Resources Board and Maj. Gen. W. R. Schmidt, Defense Department, also backed the bill. John Nolen, National Capital Parks and Planning Commission, appeared Feb. 6 to ask the Committee to amend the bill to provide funds for planners in communities which would be affected by dispersal. He said the communities do not have money available to plan for sanitary service to the dispersal areas.

After concluding hearings, the Committee took no action on the bill during 1951.

D.C. Crime Bill

A bill (HR 4141) strengthening D. C. crime laws was passed by the House June 5 but received no further action during the first session.

The House District Committee recommended the measure May 31. Opponents of the measure in the House were successful in delaying action on the bill June 4 through a series of parliamentary delaying tactics but it was passed by voice vote June 5.

Provisions — The measure would:

Provide mandatory minimum sentences of one year for assault with intent to rape, robbery, housebreaking at night, second offenses and assaulting an officer.

Increase sentences and fines on other crimes.

Put after-hours clubs under the supervision of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board and deny them licenses to operate later than other clubs where alcoholic beverages were served.

HOUSE

In its report, the House District Committee said the "ever-increasing rate of crime" in D. C. necessitated strengthening the crime laws.

When the bill was sent to the House floor, Rep. James C. Davis (D Ga.), Chairman of the House District Crime subcommittee, first sought to bring the crime bill up June 4 but opponents, led by Rep. Herman P. Eberharter (D Pa.) and Rep. Wayne L. Hays (D Ohio), successfully stalled action with a series of parliamentary delaying tactics, including two roll-call votes, three quorum calls and a reading of the 41 page bill by the House clerk.

The first roll - call vote was on a motion by Rep. Hays (Ohio) to adjourn. It was defeated, 9-224. The second was on a challenge to the formal motion of Rep. John L. McMillan (D S.C.) to bring the bill to the floor for final action. The motion to consider the bill was accepted, 231-3. (For voting, see page 402.)

When the measure was debated June 5, Eberharter objected to the mandatory minimum sentences for certain crimes. He offered an amendment to delete them but it was rejected on a 12-91 standing vote.

Rep. Robert L. Ramsay (D W.Va.) offered an amendment to increase the sentences but it also was rejected. Another Eberharter amendment which would prohibit public inspection of certain police records, also was rejected by voice vote.

The House accepted an amendment by Rep. Hays (Ohio) to deny the Commissioners the right to grant licenses to clubs to operate later than class C licensed clubs. The amendment, accepted by voice vote, was aimed at closing the so-called "after hours clubs" at the same time legitimate clubs closed.

Passage of the bill June 5 came on voice vote.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Wayne L. Hays (D Ohio) — Deny Commissioners the right to grant licenses to clubs to operate later than class C licensed clubs. Voice vote.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Herman P. Eberharter (D Pa.)— Delete mandatory minimum sentences. Standing vote, 12-91.

Robert L. Ramsay (D W.Va.)—Increase mandatory minimum sentences. Voice vote.

Eberharter — Bar public inspection of certain police records. Voice.

D.C. "Home Rule"

Legislation on self-government for the District of Columbia saw no floor action in 1951, but hearings were held before a Senate group.

A Senate District of Columbia Subcommittee opened hearings on S 655, a bill sponsored by Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) and Robert A. Taft (R Ohio), on Feb. 21. The measure would have provided an elected and reorganized city government for the District, with a council of 11 members, nine elected and two appointed by the President, to replace the appointed commissioners. It also would have permitted both chambers of Congress and the President to veto acts of the council within specified time limits.

Hearings were concluded March 5. On April 3 the Subcommittee approved S 656.

The full District of Columbia Committee on April 25 voted 6-6 against reporting S 656, and then rejected 5-7 a motion to take up S 1237, another home rule bill.

On Aug. 1, the Senate Committee, by a vote of 5-3, approved another home - rule bill, S 1976, sponsored by Francis Case (R S.D.), and on the same motion agreed to hold further hearings. This plan would have given the District an elected city council, a mayor appointed by the President and a non-voting delegate to Congress.

Majority Leader Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.) tried unsuccessfully Oct. 20 to make S 1976 the first order of business in the Senate in January, 1952. The motion prompted Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.) to announce he would "begin speaking immediately" if McFarland pressed his motion. McFarland did not, and the first session ended soon after.

Background — In 1949 the Senate passed a "home rule" bill but no House action occurred in either 1949 or 1950. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, 1949, p. 576, and Vol. VI, 1950, p. 429.)

The House completed Congressional action Oct. 19, 1951, on a bill (HR 2094) permiting the use of about $13 million — the unspent portion of $35 million previously authorized during the 79th Congress for a hospital center — to be used to aid private, non-profit and parochial hospitals in the District of Columbia.

The Senate approved the bill by roll-call vote 37-25 (see page 399) on Oct. 16 with an amendment offered by Francis Case (R S.D.) requiring the District of Columbia to pay 25 per cent of the total cost of federal-aid hospital improvements. The House agreed to the Case amendment.

The President signed the bill Oct. 25, and it became P. L. 221.

The House on April 10 passed and sent to the Senate the bill (HR 2612) authorizing the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia to put the capital on daylight savings time for the summer. Clocks were to be set forward April 29. The "fast time" would continue through Sept. 30.

Passage was by a 278-116 roll-call vote. (See page 402.) An hour of debate preceded the ballot. As in previous years, House Members representing urban areas favored the move to put Washington on daylight savings time, and rural Representatives opposed it.

The Senate passed the bill by unanimous consent on April 24, clearing the measure to the White House where President Truman signed it into public law on April 25.

D. C. Pay Raise

HR 5329—P.L. 207

Policemen, firemen and teachers of the District of Columbia and of the Panama Canal Zone received wage increases of 10 per cent, retroactive to July 1, 1951, under legislation HR 5329 enacted Oct. 25. The increase ranged from $300 minimum to $800 maximum.

Proposed raises for these employees had been included in the general federal pay raise measure (S 622) as it was passed by the Senate, but were taken out when Senators agreed to bring the House-passed D.C. pay bill out of the Senate District of Columbia Committee for Senate action. (For story on general federal pay raise, see page 326.)

The House bill (HR 5329) was reported from the House District Committee Sept. 21 and was passed by the House Sept. 24. The Senate District Committee reported the bill Oct. 18 and the Senate Oct. 19 passed it with amendments. The House agreed to the Senate amendments Oct. 20. On Oct. 25 President Truman signed HR 5329, and it became Public Law 207.

D. C. Rent Control

H J Res 173 — P. L. 10

Rent controls voted for the District of Columbia by the 81st Congress in 1950 were due to expire March 31, 1951. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 429) To continue them, the House passed a 90-day extension measure (H J Res 173) on March 12. The Senate followed suit March 20. Both actions were by voice votes. The President signed the stop-gap bill on March 23.

As the expiration date for P.L. 10 neared, the Senate approved a bill (S 1590) on June 21 to extend rent controls a full year, to July 1, 1952. The Senate's bill provided for a 20 per cent increase in rents, but excluded hotels, rooming houses and boarding houses from controls. It did, however, carry criminal penalties for violations of rent control ceilings.

The House passed a similar bill June 25 by a 171-120 roll-call vote. (See p. 402.) But the House measure was for nine months only. Accordingly, a conference committee met to reconcile differences in the two bills. The committee decided June 28 to favor the Senate measure.

The conference report, extending controls one year and allowing a 20 per cent increase over 1941 rent ceilings, was approved by the Senate by voice vote June 29. It went through the House on a 242-126 roll call. President Truman signed the measure into public law on June 30.

Federal-Local Relations

A bill (S 1146) to create a Temporary National Commission on Intergovernmental Relations was passed by the Senate July 23. A motion to reconsider the passage was left pending at the end of the 1951 session.

Designed to implement 1949 recommendations of the Hoover Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government for streamlining federal-local operations, the bill was drafted by the Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report and introduced by Sen. Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md.). (For government reorganization background, see CQ Almanacs, Vol. V, 1949, p. 555, and Vol. VI, 1950, p. 362.)

The bill would provide a bipartisan commission of 12 members, with four each appointed by the President, the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House. Half the members would be from private life. Objective of the commission would be to find the best allocation of functions and powers among the federal, state and local levels of government.

On the basis of joint hearings held during the 81st Congress, the Senate Committee on Executive Department Expenditures reported S 1146 July 12, recommending minor amendments.

The Senate took up the bill on call of the calendar July 23. It was passed without objection, under the regular unanimous consent procedure, and sent to the House.

However, a motion by Sen. Allen J. Ellender, Sr., (D La.) to recall the bill was agreed to. Ellender then put forward a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill, saying he feared the proposed commission would be too costly. At the end of the session, this motion was still pending.

Legislative Budget

Two similar fiscal proposals, both aimed at implementing the so-far inoperative "legislative budget" provisions of the 1946 Legislative Reorganization Act (this provision sets up the four appropriations and taxing committees as a joint group to recmend maximum total appropriations by February 15 each year in the light of what the country can afford to spend), were reported during the first session of the 82nd Congress by separate Senate committees. No floor action was taken on either during 1951.

S 913 by Sen. John L. McClellan (D Ark.) would replace the legislative budget committee with a Joint Committee on the Budget, to consist of five members each from the two appropriation committees, plus four members from each of the two expenditures committees.

Hearings on this proposal were held May 15 and 17 before the committee on expenditures in the executive departments. An amended version of the bill was reported unanimously from the Committee on July 25.

The bill came up on the consent calendar of Aug. 9, 1951, but was passed over upon objection of Sen. Carl Hayden (D Ariz.), chairman of the Senate Rules and Administration Committee. He wanted the bill sent to his group. When it came up again Aug. 27, the late Sen. Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) moved to send the bill to the Rules Committee and the motion carried. Later that day, Sen. McClellan moved for reconsideration of the Wherry motion, but McClellan's motion was not acted on. However, on Oct. 11, 1951, the bill was restored to the Senate calendar on motion of Sen. Blair Moody (D Mich.)

S Con Res 5 by Sen. Wherry would provide for a legislative budget committee with the functions and composition envisaged by the Legislative Reorganization Act, except that it limited the Joint Commitee membership to 20—five each from the four money committees of Congress. It also required cost estimates in committee reports on all new proposals to authorize appropriations. On Oct. 8, 1951, Sen. William E. Jenner (R Ind.) on behalf of Sen. Wherry, submitted a majority report from the Rules Committee favoring this bill. Sen. Hayden submitted a minority report, attacking the Wherry measure. No action was taken by the Senate.

Reapportionment

Although the Administration urged changes in the redistricting laws and proposals for such changes were introduced, bills to carry out these plans were not acted on during the first session of the 82nd Congress.

Background — Every ten years, House seats must be allotted on the basis of new census figures. The 1950 Census Bureau's final population figures for each state revealed that Eastern and Southern states did not keep up with the growth of the rest of the nation. The West — California in particular — led in expansion.

After Congress approves the Census Bureau computations it notifies the governor of each state the number of Representatives his state will be allowed. It is then up to each state to redistrict if a seat is gained or lost. If a state gains a seat, the new Representative may be elected "at large," that is, be voted on by the entire state. In this case the existing districts remain unchanged.

Early in the session, on Jan. 9, President Truman gave Congress the official state population figures as compiled by the Census Bureau during the nation-wide 1950 census. In a general message on reapportionment which accompanied the figures, the President asked for changes in the existing law which would tighten Congressional control of state redistricting. Specifically he asked for a ban on gerrymandering, an end to "at-large" seats in states having more than one Representative and a sharp reduction on the huge differences in size between districts in each state.

HOUSE

On behalf of the Administration, Rep. Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) introduced Feb. 14 HR 2648 providing for redistricting of congressional districts so they would be compact and contiguous and population would not vary more than 15 per cent between districts within a state. It would eliminate all at large seats and make redistricting mandatory every ten years to meet population changes. If, in 1952 or thereafter, a House member were elected from a district not conforming to the requirements of the bill, he would be denied his House seat.

Hearings

The House Judiciary Committee opened hearings on the measure April 3. Lead-off witness Rep. Franck R. Havenner (D Calif.) charged that the Republican-controlled California legislature threatened to redistrict him out of office. Testifying April 4, Rep. Chet Holifield (D Calif.) objected to the California reapportionment plan on the ground that the "small districts are all Republican and the large districts are all Democratic." This plan would make it cheaper and easier for the Republicans to campaign in the small districts and give the Democrats a large volume of work to handle, he said.

Gov. Edwin L. Mechem (R) of New Mexico told the House Judiciary Committee April 24 he did not think his state would benefit by electing "our Representatives from special districts."

Jack Kroll, director of the CIO Political Action Committee, suggested April 30 that Congressional redistricting might be delayed until the next census to allow "the states a full nine years to clean house." He favored Cellar's bill but suggested that the effective date of the bill—January, 1953—be extended because many state legislatures already had adjourned, making it impossible for the states to comply with the law in time for the 1952 elections.

Another reapportionment proposal was advanced when Rep. Victor Wickersham (D Okla.) introduced legislation (H J Res 261) May 17 which proposed an amendment to the U.S. Constitution providing for apportionment of Congressional representation among the states on the basis of the number of U.S. citizens rather than total population within each state. Census figures showed Oklahoma had a low percentage of aliens.

The House Judiciary Committee took no action during 1951 on the reapportionment proposals.

However, in states whose Representation was changed as a result of the 1950 census, redistricting action was completed or under consideration as the year ended.

House Votes: Conflict-of-Interest Statute; Investigations; West Point Celebration; Federal Pay Raises

1. Suspension of Conflict-of-Interest Statute (S J Res 70). Provide that conflict-of-interest statute shall not apply to attorney employed by Senate Rules and Administration Committee for investigation of Ohio election. (Statute forbids employee of any agency of the government, for two years after he leaves government employ, to represent a claimant against the government in any subject matter with which he was concerned during his government employment. See story, p. 352.) Passage of bill. Rejected, 120-164, June 18.
2. Investigations by Banking and Currency Committee (H Res 436). Authorize Committee on Banking and Currency to conduct studies and investigations on matters coming within its jurisdiction, in or outside the U.S., and to include an investigation to determine whether housing loans and guarantees have been granted on defective housing. (See story, p. 335.) Adoption of resolution. Agreed to, 284-15, Oct. 8.
3. West Point Sesquicentennial (H J Res 285). Authorize participation by the U.S. in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of establishment of the U.S. Military Academy. (See story, p. 332.) Rule (H Res 463) providing for consideration. Agreed to, 179-149, Oct. 18.
4. Postal Employees Pay Raise (S 355). Provide minimum $400 pay raises for classified postal employees, 20 per cent increases for fourth-class postmasters, reclassification and 8.8 per cent increase for other postmasters, and 20-cent-an-hour increase for hourly employees. (See story, p. 328.) Conference report. Agreed to, 339-7, Oct. 19.
5. Classified Federal Employees Pay Raise (S 622). Provide 10 per cent increases for federal employees, with minimum increase of $300 and maximum of $800. (See story, p. 326.) Conference report. Agreed to, 318-26, Oct. 19.

Definitions Of Tax Terms

Here are definitions of some terms used in tax legislation.

Taxable income — The portion of personal income from any source which is subject to tax. A person whose income does not exceed his exemptions would have no taxable income.

Exemptions — The law provides a personal income exemption of $600 for each taxpayer, and $600 for each of his dependents. Taxpayers over age 65 get an additional exemption of $600.

Income brackets — Classifications, according to amount of income, for purposes of determining the tax rate and figuring the total tax. The rates increase as the income increases.

Normal tax — The basic tax of three per cent on personal income. Under present law even the lowest bracket also is subject to surtax. For most purposes the combined rate is used to figure the tax, but the "normal tax" provision is retained in the law because interest on certain government bonds is subject only to surtax, and has to be figured separately.

Surtax — Tax which grows progressively steeper as income goes up.

Marginal rate and effective rate— The marginal rate is the percentage rate for each bracket; the effective rate is the actual percentage of total income, or an average of the rates on each bracket.

Ceiling — The maximum tax which can be levied.

Split-income provision — A provision which allows a husband and wife to file a joint return and compute the tax as if each one had half of the total income, resulting in a much lower tax for upper bracket income groups.

Head-of-household provision — A provision which gives the head of a household some of the benefits which he could get if the split-income provision were available to him.

Capital gains and losses — Gains or losses from the sale or exchange of income-producing property or investments. Long - term capital gains or losses accrue from property held for more than six months, and half of the gain or loss is added or subtracted from income. Short - term capital gains or losses accrue from property held for six months or less, and the total amount is added or subtracted.

Corporate income — The income received by a corporation.

Excess-profits — Profits which exceed a certain percentage of the average income of a corporation over a specified period.

Depreciation — A method of recovering the investment in income-producing property.

Cost depletion — Similar to depreciation. This system is used to recover cost of developing mineral resources. The amount of depletion charged against each ton of ore is determined by the estimated quantity of ore obtainable.

Percentage depletion — A fixed percentage of the value of the mineral resource, which may be deducted from receipts. The operator may use either cost depletion or percentage depletion in any one year, depending on which is to his advantage, but he may not use both in the same year. Those who receive royalty payments use percentage depletion because they have ordinarily made no investment in development.

Royalty — Fee paid to the owner of property on which there is a mine, oil or gas well, or natural deposit; also a fee paid the owner of a patent, copyright, secret formula, trademark, etc.

Amortization — Similar to depreciation. To encourage the building of plants for defense purposes, owners are allowed to charge off all or a major part of the investment over a five-year period.

Collapsible corporation — One set up for a single, short-term enterprise (such as production of a motion picture, construction of an apartment building, etc.) and then abolished. This permits sale of assets on abolition to be treated as a capital gain instead of ordinary income.

Controlled corporation — A corporation owned by one or more other corporations, or owned directly or indirectly by one to five individuals. An owner can "dispose" of assets, but still retain effective control of them, by selling them to his own controlled corporation.

Taxes—Revenue Act Of 1951

Summary — In an attempt to place the defense program on a more nearly pay-as-we-go basis, Congress in 1951 approved a bill (HR 4473) to increase taxes by $5.691 billion annually. The measure was enacted after the President had asked for a $16 billion increase, a request later reduced to $10 billion.

Of the total to be raised, about $2.28 was to come from increased taxation on individual incomes, about $2.207 billion from increased corporation taxes and about $1.204 from new and increased excise taxes.

The President's recommendations were studied by the tax writing House Ways and Means Committee for more than four months. The Committee pared the figures and recommended a $7.199 billion increase June 18 breaking it down into $2.847 billion personal income taxes, $2.855 in corporate taxes, $1.252 in excise taxes and $245 million in other changes.

The bill was debated in the House under a "closed rule" which barred amendments. The Committee recommendations were accepted by the House June 22 on a 233-160 roll-call vote. (For voting, see Page 540.)

The Senate Finance Committee worked on the bill almost three months, recommending a $5.506 billion measure Sept. 18. The Senate Committee measure asked increases of $2.367 billion from individuals, $2.060 from corporations, $1.275 billion from excise taxes, $150 million from new levies on tax-exempt organizations and a reduction of $244 million from miscellaneous changes.

The Senate amended it in many details, but made no large changes in revenue yield. The Senate measure was approved Sept. 28 on roll-call vote, 57-19. (For voting, see page 535.)

A joint House-Senate conference worked out a compromise to raise about $5.75 in new taxes. This bill was rejected in the House by a surprisingly strong coalition of Republicans and Administration Democrats. The vote, Oct. 16, was 157-204, on roll-call.

The bill was sent back for a second conference group. A series of minor changes were made, reducing the revenue yield; and the House accepted it Oct. 19, 185-160, on roll-call vote. The Senate approved the final measure Oct. 18 on voice vote. The President signed it, "reluctantly," Oct. 20 and it became Public Law 183.

PROVISIONS

The Revenue Act of 1951 increased personal income and corporate taxes and increased and extended excise taxes. The estimated revenue yield of the Act was $5.691 billion. It was designed to increase personal income taxes by $2.28 billion, corporation taxes $2.207 billion and excise taxes by $1.204 billion. General provisions were:

Income Taxes

Corporations (General): Increase normal tax to 30 per cent. Set ceiling of 18 per cent on amount that can be taken in excess-profits taxes. Make taxes effective April 1, 1951, and set termination date at March 31, 1954. Reduce average earnings credit for excess-profits tax from 85 to 83 per cent of the earnings in the three best years of four year period 1946-49. Effective July 1, 1951.

Background

The new 82nd Congress received the outline of the proposed biggest tax increase in history on Feb. 2, when President Truman submitted his tax message.

He asked for an immediate hike of $10 billion in individual income, corporation and excise taxes, plus the closing of some tax loopholes and stricter enforcement efforts. Later in the year, he said, Congress should levy the "remaining amounts" needed to keep the country on a "pay-as-we-go" tax basis.

He didn't specify what the "remaining amounts" would be — because, he pointed out, Congress would have to act first on the budget before actual expenditures would be determined — but the budget he sent to Capitol Hill called for spending $71.5 billion, as against receipts under prevailing tax laws of $55 billion. If Congress enacted the newly-proposed $10 billion increase, a later tax bill would have to raise $6.5 billion to meet the deficit.

The "first package" bill which Mr. Truman said Congress ought to enact as "rapidy as possible" proposed:

An increase of $4 billion a year in individual income taxes. Mr. Truman did not specify how this increase should be parceled out but said "higher taxes cannot be limited to upper income groups — it will also be necessary to tax people with moderate income." The existing $600 exemption should stand, he said.

An increase in corporation income taxes of $3 billion a year. "In the light of high and rising corporate profits," he told Congress, "the increase . . .will leave corporations able to maintain the dividend and reinvestment policies of recent years."

Increases in "selective excise taxes" of $3 billion. He said the hikes shoud be "concentrated upon less essential consumer goods".

Furtherance of the program Congress started in 1950 to close loopholes in tax laws. He referred to "gross undertaxation of oil and mining industries", to "broad loopholes" in estate and gift taxes and to "undue preferential treatment granted gains in comparison with ordinary income."

Further improvement of enforcement efforts "to make sure that the taxes which are due under present laws are actually paid."

"Pay As We Go"

Referring to estimated expenditures, the President said: "It is my firm conviction that we should pay for these as we go. A balanced budget now is just as important a mobilization measure as larger armed forces, allocations of basic materials, and controls over prices and wages."

These were specific Administration requests contained in the President's tax proposals (as interpreted by Secretary of the Treasury John Snyder on Feb. 5):

Individual Incomes — A four-percentage point increase in all rate brackets, to raise an estimated $3.6 billion a year; a thorough reexamination of the split-income provision for treating income of married couples.

Corporation Income — An eight-percentage point increase in the corporate normal tax which was 25 per cent, to raise an additional $3.080 billion. This would increase the rate on a corporation's first $25,000 from 25 to 33 per cent and maximum rate on income over $25,000 from 47 per cent to 55 per cent. The existing additional 30 per cent tax on profits adjudged "excess" would remain the same, but since it was applied on top of regular income levies, the maximum effective rate on "windfall" earnings would be raised from 77 per cent to 85 per cent. And an increase in the corporate tax ceiling from 62 per cent of all income to 70 per cent.

Excise Taxes — Increase excises on a long list of consumer goods, to raise an estimated $3.060 billion. On the list were: passenger automobiles, from a seven to 20 per cent manufacturers excise tax; gasoline, from 1.5 cents to three cents a gallon; cigarettes, from seven to 10 cents a pack; distilled spirits, from $9 to $12 a gallon; beer, from $8 to $12 a gallon; television, radio and phonograph sets, from a 10 per cent to a 25 per cent manufacturers excise tax; and imposition of a manufacturers excise on electrical appliances such as vacuum cleaners, washing machines, dishwashers, sewing machines and razors.

Tax Loopholes — Establishment of a withholding system for collecting taxes on corporation dividend payments like the one in force on wages and salaries. A reduction in the "depletion allowances" granted oil and gas producers from 27.5 per cent to 15 per cent, with corresponding cuts for mineral products. Increased estate and gift taxes. Repeal of tax exemption for state and municipal bonds. Establishment of a "more equitable" system for taxing the earnings of life insurance companies. Application of the regular corporate income tax to earnings which cooperatives, mutual savings banks and building and loan associations do not return to their members. Tightened tax treatment for long-term capital gains, resulting from sale of stocks and other capital assets held over six months in the form of an increase in the effective tax rate on such gains from the present 25 per cent to 37.5 per cent and lengthening of the holding period from six months to at least a year.

House

Summary — The House Ways and Means Committee, the group which writes all tax legislation, listened to witnesses from Feb. 5 through March 14. The Committee then spent three months behind closed doors threshing out details of the huge bill.

The House debated the measure for two days, approved it and sent it on to the Senate. The House-approved bill called for a $7.2 billion tax increase.

HOUSE'S PROVISIONS

Major provisions of the bill passed by the House were:

Income Taxes

Corporations: Increase normal tax rate from 25 to 30 per cent and over-all ceiling on corporate taxation from 62 to 70 per cent of total income, effective Jan. 1, 1951. Reduce average earnings credit for excess-profits tax from 85 to 75 per cent of the earnings in the three best years in the four-year period, 1946-49, effective Jan. 1, 1951.

Capital Gains: Increase tax liability on net capital gains by 12.5 per cent, effective Sept. 1, 1951. Increase for calendar year 1951 was four per cent.

Individuals: Impose a 12.5 per cent increase in income and capital gains tax liability, to be known as a defense tax; raise the maximum effective rate limitation from 87 to 90 per cent and set the marginal rate of tax on surtax net income of $80,000 and over at 94.5 per cent, effective Sept. 1, 1951. Increase for calendar year 1951 was four per cent.

Single heads of households: Grant one-half of the advantage that married taxpayers had over single persons from income splitting.

Excise Taxes

(Generally the effective date for changes was to be the first day of the first month which began more than 10 days after date of enactment.

Admissions: Exempt benefit performances where proceeds went to religious, educational (including nonprofit opera companies) or charitable institutions; nonprofit community-supported symphony orchestras and cooperative or community center motion picture theaters; and swimming pools and other places providing facilities for physical exercise if operated by governmental units. Specifically not exempted were admissions to wrestling or boxing matches; carnivals, or athletic contests unless the proceeds went to elementary or secondary schools.

Free admissions: Exempt from tax, and in case of admissions at reduced rates apply the tax only to the amount actually paid.

Appliances (electric, oil and gas): Make no change in rates but broaden the base to include power lawn mowers, electric or gas clothes driers, belt-driven fans, dehumidifiers, dishwashers, doorbell chimes, food choppers and meat grinders, hedge clippers, sheets and spreads, shavers, floor polishers and waxers, pants pressers, mangles and motion or still picture projectors. Exempt electric heating pads.

Automobiles, motorcycles: Increase from seven to 10 per cent, but exempt house trailers. Revenue, $196 million. Increase tax on trucks, truck trailers and busses from five to eight per cent.

Automotive parts and accessories: Increase rate on new parts from five to eight per cent. On rebuilt parts, change the tax base to exclude the fair market value of the old part traded in on rebuilt part. On farm equipment, provide a tax refund or credit, but exclude spark plugs, storage batteries, leaf springs, coils, timers and tire chains.

Distilled spirits: Increase tax from $9 to $10.50 a proof gallon and increase draw-back where used in foods, medicines, etc., from $6 to $9.50 a gallon (decreasing net tax from $3 to $1). Impose floor stock tax of $1.50 a gallon where held for use or sale after tax became effective. Increase annual occupational tax for retail liquor dealers from $27.50 to $50, wholesale liquor dealers from $110 to $200.

Beer: Increase tax from $8 to $9 a barrel. Impose floor stock tax of $1 a barrel. Increase occupational tax on wholesale dealers from $55 to $100.

Wine: Increase existing taxes on the average about 12.5 per cent. Impose floor stock taxes.

Bowling alleys, billiard and pool tables: Increase the tax for each alley or table from $20 to $25 a year. Increase annual occupational tax on coin-operated gaming devices from $150 to $250.

Cabarets: Exempt from excise taxes where serving foods, etc., was incidental to furnishing music and dancing privileges.

Cigarettes: Increase from seven to eight cents a package ($3.50 to $4.50 a thousand). Impose one cent a package floor stock tax. Impose 20 per cent retail tax on cigarette, cigar and pipe lighters.

Domestic telegraph, radio and cable services: Reduce excise taxes from 25 to 20 per cent.

Gasoline: Increase from 1.5 to two cents a gallon and impose a floor stock tax of one-half cent a gallon on wholesalers' supplies on date of increase. Impose a two-cents-a-gallon tax where sold to or used by operators of diesel-powered highway vehicles.

Electrical energy: Repeal tax.

Pens and pencils: Impose 20 per cent manufacturers tax on fountain and ball point pens and mechanical pencils.

Photographic apparatus and equipment: Establish flat 20 per cent tax rate in lieu of existing 25 per cent on apparatus and equipment and 15 per cent on films, and exempt "business cost" items from the tax.

Radio receivers: Exempt from tax type used in commercial, military, or marine installations when sold to United States for its use.

Sporting goods: Increase from 10 to 15 per cent but exempt from tax items primarily used in schools and by children, except baseballs and baseball equipment.

Toilet preparations: Exempt from 20 per cent retail tax baby oils, powders and lotions and toilet preparations used in barber and beauty shops.

Tires for toys, lawn mowers, etc: Exempt from five cents a pound tax where not more than 20 inches in diameter.

Transportation: Exempt fishing boat trips from tax on transportation of persons. Extend the tax on property to include transportation of oil by barge or tanker by shippers who transported their own oil.

Wagering: Impose a 10 per cent tax on that part of the gross receipts of persons taking wagers on which they assume the risk of profit or loss, and impose an occupational tax of $50 a year on persons accepting wagers or operating a handbook or lottery, with penalties.

Capital Gains Tax

Rates: Apply the 12.5 per cent increase in individual income tax liability to the alternative tax on capital gains of individuals and corporations.

Residence: Recognize the gain on sale of residence (including cooperative apartments) only to the extent the proceeds exceed the cost of a new residence purchased within one year before or after sale of the old residence, and give the new residence the same basis as the old. Effective, Jan. 1, 1951.

Livestock: Extend capital gain treatment to livestock held by taxpayers for draft, breeding or dairy purposes for 12 months or more, effective Jan. 1, 1951.

Coal royalties: Treat as capital gain instead of ordinary income. Effective Jan. 1, 1951.

Miscellaneous

Development of Mines: Treat expenditures incurred in the development of mines, after discovery of commercial quantities, as deferred expenses deductible ratably over the period mineral benefited is sold.

Educational Institutions: Exempt income derived from unrelated business activities or feeder corporations for years prior to 1951. (Such income was made taxable by Revenue Act of 1950.)

Family Partnerships: Recognize as a partner for tax purposes, a person owning a capital interest in a partnership in which capital was a material income-producing factor, whether or not such interest was derived by purchase or gift.

Insurance Companies: Continue for 1951 stop-gap legislation adopted in Revenue Act of 1950 for taxation of life-insurance companies.

Loopholes: Provide that in the case of closely held corporations, depreciable assets sold by stockholders to corporation should be considered non-capital assets and that gains from such sales be treated as ordinary income. Would apply to sales or exchanges made after May 3, 1951. Include in the term, collapsible corporation, a corporation which was organized to convert profits from sales of inventory and stock into capital gains. Permit only one surtax exemption, in the case of corporation split-ups, and only one minimum excess-profits tax credit to members of a controlled group of corporations. Require dealers in securities to clearly earmark securities upon purchase or acquisition as to whether they are held for investment or sale. Transfer from one account to another not recognized for tax purposes. Long-term losses to offset short-term gains in full, and long-term gains to offset short-term losses before reducing the long-term gains or losses by the 50 per cent limitation under present law. Include in the taxable estate of non-resident aliens United States government bonds issued on or after March 1, 1941, where decedent dies after date of enactment and such aliens are not engaged in trade or business in the United States.

Percentage depletion: Add following at rate of five per cent: sand, gravel, granite, marble, stone (including pumice, scoria and slate), brick and tile clay, shale, oyster and clam shell and asbestos; and the following at the rate of 15 per cent: borax, fuller's earth, refractory and fire clay, quartzite, perlite, diatomaceous earth, metallurgical and chemical grade limestone and tripoli. Increase the allowance for coal from five to 10 per cent. Remove the restriction which only allows the 15 per cent rate when it is obtained from brines and mixtures of brine.

Venture capital: Exempt from corporation income tax, venture capital companies which have as their principal purpose the supplying of capital to corporations engaged principally in developing or exploiting new inventions, improvements or new devices, processes or products, where income was distributed substantially to stockholders.

Withholding on dividends, royalties, and certain payments of interest to individuals: Impose a 20 per cent witholding tax on recipients. The latter would be credited for amounts withheld when they filed regular income tax returns. Exempt patronage dividends of cooperatives and amounts paid by mutual savings banks, building and loan associations, credit unions, cooperative banks and similar organizations, also royalty payments on mines, oil and gas wells, and interest on bonds and on overpayment of federal taxes.

Refund claims: Permit recipients to accumulate refund claims for a period of seven years for the first $2 witheld each year. The existing three-year statute would be applicable in the amount of claims in excess of $2 each year.

Form 1099 information returns: Require returns on payments of interest of $100 or more where withholding not applicable, and on payments of dividends and interest of $300 or more where witholding applicable and on all royalty payments.

Withholding on wages and salaries: Increase amount to be withheld from 18 per cent to 20 per cent necessary to collect additional taxes due resulting from imposition of defense tax.

More Than $7 Billion

Some of the provisions approved by the House would have reduced, rather than increased, specific revenues. But as the House approved HR 4473, it would have raised an additional $7.199 billion from all taxes.

HEARINGS

The House Ways and Means Committee Feb. 5 opened hearings on President Truman's "first package" multi-billion dollar tax program by taking details about the program from Secretary of the Treasury John W. Snyder.

As he spelled it out, the program would impose the highest tax rates in history on individual and corporation incomes and on a number of consumer goods, such as automobiles and home appliances. The individual income taxes, he said, should be retroactive to Jan. 1, 1951.

Snyder, strongly supporting the President's "pay-as-we-go" plan, and the "two package" approach, confined his recommendations to the first phase of the tax program. For that program he set a minimum goal of $10.155 billion, a slightly higher figure than the rounded target the President projected in his message. He said the Treasury was not ready to make detailed recommendations for the second phase of the program.

Internal Revenue Commissioner George J. Schoeneman urged the Committee Feb. 6 to enact a withholding tax on interest and dividends as a major step to improve the government's tax enforcement program. He said such a tax alone would net the Treasury an additional $250 million a year. He estimated that from $1 billion to $1.5 billion in tax liabilities were, at that time, neither reported nor uncovered.

Frederick J. Lawton, Bureau of the Budget director, Feb. 8 questioned whether there was enough "flexibility" in the pending $71.5 billion budget to permit elimination of any big slice of expenditures.

Stabilizers Testify

Eric Johnston, Economic Stabilization Administrator, and Michael V. DiSalle, head of the Office of Price Stabilization, went before the Committee Feb. 14 to testify to the importance of higher taxes in controlling inflation.

Johnston urged speed and said "delay will eat at our economic strength." To stabilize the economy, he advocated a "drastic limitation" on non-defense spending plus:

Use of wage-price controls to help level off the cost of living; a "drastic boost in taxes so we can pay for defense as we go and siphon off excess purchasing power"; "more comprehensive" credit limitations; and "vast" multiplication of production and productive facilities to fill the "vital defense needs."

DiSalle said higher taxes were needed to curb inflation and raise revenue, but qualified his endorsement of new excise taxes. He argued that most excise taxes could not be absorbed by producers and would have to be passed on to consumers. He said price administration problems would be simpler if increased excises were imposed at the producing rather than the retail level. Also, he questioned whether corporation income taxes could all be absorbed.

Defers Action

After hearing DiSalle, the Committee went into a closed session, at which it decided to defer rush action on Mr. Truman's $10 billion "first package" tax increase until it had reviewed the entire tax revenue situation.

This decision opening the whole field of taxation to study stipulated that further testimony would include all recommendations on the President's program made, or due to be made, by Snyder, including the closing of loopholes, and all other proposals for additional revenue on which members of the Committee might desire information; and hearings would be completed on all suggestions before any decision was taken either on a "one-package" or a "two-package" program.

The Committee's Republicans, including Daniel A. Reed (N.Y.) and Richard M. Simpson (Pa.) interpreted the decision on procedure as barring a "quickie" $10 billion tax boost. Reed said he had served notice of intention to call Snyder back for questioning on proposals for the "second package." Chairman Robert L. Doughton (D N.C.) said the Committee "will do the job just as expeditiously as we can."

The Committee decision on procedure drew from President Truman Feb. 15 the response that the Committee's delay on his "quickie" boost was endangering the Administration's anti - inflationary program. He said he still thought his plan was right.

Previously, Chairman Walter F. George (D Ga.) of the Senate Finance Committee had advised Snyder Feb. 10 that a majority of his own group was opposed to the "two-package" increase, and Doughton had commented that it wouldn't do any good if the House passed two bills as the President wanted only to have the Senate lump them into one.

New Hearings Basis

As sessions resumed under the Feb. 14 procedures agreement, some 260 persons had asked to be heard.

The National Grange's legislative counsel, J. T. Sanders, Feb. 15 endorsed the Administration's "pay as we go" tax program, declaring that all groups including agriculture "must willingly meet any necessary sacrifice." He also endorsed the proposal to tax retained earnings of cooperatives. Paul D. Seghers, legislative chairman of the Federal Tax Forum, proposed a higher excess-profits tax, with graduated rates, as a substitute for the increase in regular rates proposed by the Administration.

Arthur A. Elder, who outlined the American Federation of Labor's position Feb. 16, called the proposed excise rates "discriminatory and unnecessary" and suggested, instead, that income-splitting advantages for married couples, which allowed them to pay lower tax rates, ought to be eliminated, as a revenue-raising device. He said $2.5 billion could be raised this way. While he endorsed the recommended increases in individual and corporation income rates, he said special credits ought to be granted persons with "sub-standard income below $2,000."

The chief of the Internal Revenue Bureau's alcohol tax unit, Carroll E. Mealey, told the Committee Feb. 19 that his "revenuers" could cope with any moonshining or bootlegging that might result from the proposed increase in liquor excises, though he admitted some difficulty might be encountered in the South.

Russ Nixon, Washington representative of the United Electrical Workers, Feb. 20 recommended a $4 billion reduction in income-tax obligations of persons in low income brackets and elimination of old and proposed new excises on beer, cigarettes, transportation and household appliances. Declaring that 45 per cent of the low and middle income families were receiving less than a living wage, Nixon said the National Association of Manufacturers and the U. S. Chamber of Commerce were "seeking to take food from hungry families in order to preserve big incomes, big profits and big estates."

Small Business Hurt

Many small business enterprises, in the face of increasing taxes, mounting materials shortages and financing difficulties, were close to ruin, George J. Burger, vice-president of the National Federation of Independent Business, told the Committee Feb. 20. Further tax increases on corporations making $25,000 or under, to the 33 per cent level sought in the Administration's defense tax program, "may push them over the brink to complete disaster," the NFIB spokesman said. He advocated no further taxes on small and independent businesses; or while raising taxes on such firms, either permit tax deductions for plant expansions or improvement, permit greater retention of earnings for reserves, or eliminate double taxation of dividends, perhaps with some ceiling attached.

Stanley H. Ruttenberg of the Congress of Industrial Organizations Feb. 21 testified that taxes should be raised $16 billion or $17 billion but that it should be done without new excises and mostly from higher income sources.

Willford I. King, chairman of the Commitee for Constitutional Government, told the legislators that all taxes on corporations ought to be abolished and that a maximum individual income-tax rate of 45 per cent should be adopted. He said defense should be financed by "a comprehensive system of excise taxes."

Robert P. Boylan, representing the New York Cotton Exchange, and John C. White, counsel for the American Cotton Shippers Association, criticized the Administration's proposed stiffening of the capital gains tax. They said speculation was necessary to make the cotton marketing system effective and "we will not get it if the Treasury proposals are accepted."

Calvin K. Snyder, representing the National Association of Real Estate Boards, Feb. 22 registered his organization's opposition to the proposed increase in the capital gains tax from 25 per cent to 37.5 per cent and urged the Committee instead to relax the treatment of certain home sales. The NAREB spokesman suggested that when a taxpayer sells a home he should not be required to pay tax on any profit from the sale if, within 12 months following the sale, he buys another house.

Seeks Termination Date

Allan B. Kline, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, endorsed the President's proposed two-package "pay as we go" tax program, but he condemned the Treasury Department's price - pegging of government securities. Kline opposed any increase in the federal levy on gasoline but suggested a 3.5 per cent tax on electrical energy sold by publicly - owned systems, cooperatives and non-profit corporations for domestic or commercial use as well as "a definite termination date" for all emergency taxation measures.

Clarence D. Laylin of the Council of State Chambers of Commerce proposed that Congress place primary reliance on excise taxes to achieve a balanced budget. If, however, individual income taxes were necessary, he stated, a "defense tax" should be imposed at a uniform rate on net incomes after deductions for taxes in effect. No further corporation taxes should be imposed, Laylin added.

L. Shirley Tark, spokesman for the Illinois Bankers Association, recommended that building and loan associations be taxed on all amounts distributed as dividends, on the same basis as commercial and savings banks, but Oscar R. Kreutz, for the National Savings and Loan League called this proposal "unfair" and said its adoption would disrupt home mortgage financing.

Opposes Bond Tax

Mayor Vincent R. Impellitteri warned the Committee Feb. 26 that the proposed imposition of federal taxes on state and municipal bonds would force New York City to cut back, if not abandon, many essential public improvements. State Controller J. Raymond McGovern declared New York state also faced the same prospect. Spokesmen for the states of Pensylvania, Florida, North Carolina, Iowa and Maine were recorded similarly in opposition to the tax. Mayor David L. Lawrence of Pittsburgh testified against the proposal for the Conference of Mayors.

Earl E. Hagerman, speaking for the Association of Ohio Municipalities, took a different tack Feb. 27 in opposing taxation of local bonds. He said the Administration's proposal might be intended as a step toward federal control over local financing of schools and the like. Carl H. Chatters, executive director of the American Municipal Association, said adoption of the proposal would make borrowing by small communities almost impossible. Other witnesses, including Mayors Walter Savage, of Dallas, Tex., W. Cooper Green of Birmingham, Ala., and Herbert Barnett, of Enid, Okla., expressed strong opposition to the proposal.

Feb. 28, Ralph W. Button, spokesman for the National Retail Dry Goods Association urged the Committee to wrap all the year's proposed tax increases into a single bill and, in that bill, set the tax rate on corporations no higher than a maximum 50 per cent.

Jerry Voorhis, executive secretary of the Cooperative League of the U. S. A., was the lead-off witness as the Committee plunged March 1 into the long-standing controversy over taxation of the cooperative organizations. Voorhis denied these organizations enjoyed unfair tax advantage and said they were being attacked through "political means to eliminate competition of a most fundamentally democratic and typically American type of business organization".

Voorhis, a former Democratic Representative from California, contended March 1 that earnings of cooperatives were not profits and did not legally belong to them; thus they could not be taxed except as income to members. Voorhis' argument was that corporations as such would not have to pay taxes if they gave all their profits back to customers instead of distributing them to stockholders.

Walter Scott, representing the Grain and Feed Dealers National Association, expressed the view March 1 that there is no essential difference between a cooperative and the ordinary business corporation. Since they compete and deal in the same commodities, they should be taxed alike, according to Scott's argument. He pointed out that corporations pay taxes on earnings while their stockholders pay further taxes on their dividends.

Charles A. Jackson, a director of the National Tax Equality Association, March 2 urged taxation of all exempted co-operative income and said the government would, thereby, raise more than $1 billion in new revenue. Joseph J. O'Connell Jr., also of the NTEA, contended exclusion of patronage dividends from taxable income of co-ops was inconsistent with other federal policies.

Heard as defenders of co-op exemptions were Charles W. Holman of the National Milk Producers Federation, D. W. Brooks of the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives, and Fred Heinkel of the Missouri Farmers Association.

On Minerals

Mineral producers March 5 urged the Committee to oppose the Administration's plan to cut percentage depletion allowances. Practically all witnesses not only wanted the allowances continued but said more liberal treatment was needed. Those testifying were James W. Haley, secretary of the National Coal Association; M. D. Harbaugh, vice president of the Lake Superior Iron Ore Association; Langbourne Williams, president of the Freeport Sulphur Company; Fred O. Davis, vice president of the Potash Company of America, and Donald A. Callahan, vice president of the American Mining Congress.

On March 6, S. A. Swensrud, president of Gulf Oil Corporation, said "the depletion allowance has become as much a part of oil production as the rotary rig." Russell B. Brown, general counsel of the Independent Petroleum Association of America, declared the principle has become so "valuable as an incentive to the search for oil that I shouldn't be surprised some day to hear the Russians claim they invented it."

The existing allowance — 27.5 per cent of the gross return from a well, but not more than half the net income plus a portion of drilling and development costs — was deductible by well owners from their incomes before figuring taxes, as a recompense for the disposal of an irreplaceable capital asset and to encourage search for new sources of supply. Smaller deductions were allowed producers of other minerals. Among those supporting continuation of the allowances were: O. C. Bailey, chairman of the Arkansas Oil and Gas Commission; Chairman R. B. Anderson, Texas State Board of Education; W. H. Geis, California petroleum engineer; Lt. Gen. Ernest O. Thompson of the Texas Railroad Commission and former Oklahoma Congressman Wesley E. Disney (D).

A broad retail sales tax was proposed March 7 by the National Committee on Fair Emergency Excise Taxation. The suggested tax would have covered all commodities except food, medicine, rents, alcohol, tobacco and gasoline. No specific rate was proposed. Those presenting the plan for the NCFEET were Louis Ruthenburg, head of Servel, Inc.; Leon Henderson, wartime head of the Office of Price Administration; Wilson Wyatt, former federal housing expediter; and Arde Bulova.

On Tobacco

A drop of 20 per cent in consumption of cigarettes, if the seven-cents-a-pack tax were increased to 10 cents was predicted March 9 by William C. Clay, counsel for the Burley Leaf Tobacco Warehouse Association. He said the tobacco industry "could not possibly make a living out of the price paid for pipe and roll-your-own mixtures."

John M. Berry, vice - president of the Burley Tobacco Growers Cooperative Association, said the proposed tax would give the government three-and-a-third times as much from each acre of tobacco as the grower receives. Thomas Pepper, representing the Farmers Federation of Asheville, N. C., said tobacco already was taxed "beyond a safe margin for continued stability in long-range production planning." Other witnesses who opposed increase were W. D. Green, spokesman for the Middle Tennessee Burley Tobacco Growers, R. H. Proctor of the Kentucky Farm Bureau Federation, Maury A. Hubbard of the Virginia Farm Bureau Federation and P. N. Taylor, president of the North Carolina Farm Bureau.

Representatives of the liquor industry March 12 warned the Committee to get set for a wave of moonshining and bootlegging if it heeded the request for new taxes on whiskey, beer and wine.

Asks Reduction

Guy C. Shearer, chairman of the Kentucky Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, urged that the tax on whiskey be cut to $6 a gallon instead of raised to $12. He said the "tax on whiskey is greater than the tax on any other luxury item." Other witnesses denied that alcoholic beverages were a luxury. Clinton M. Hester of the United States Brewers Foundation called beer "an essential food" necessary to public and military morale. Greyton H. Taylor, chairman of the Wine Conference of America, said flatly that "wine is not a luxury" while Lawrence H. Eldredge, of the Pennsylvania Alcoholic Beverage Study, Inc., said whiskey was used with some regularity by a majority of all adult Americans. H. Clyde Reeves, Kentucky Revenue Commissioner and Ralph T. Heymsfeld, spokesman for Schenley Industries, Inc., also testified in opposition to the taxes.

The Administration-sought boost in auto taxes was attacked March 13 by A. E. Barit, chairman of the taxation committee of the Automobile Manufacturers Association.

Stuart G. Tipton, general counsel of the Air Transport Association, and Edgar S. Idol, speaking for the American Trucking Association, urged rejection of the proposal to double the existing 1.5 cent-a-gallon tax on gasoline. Charles E. Oakes, president of Pennsylvania Power and Light Company, spoke against a further increase in corporate income taxes or for special power to pass them on to the consumer if the taxes were to be raised.

Manufacturers of home appliances protested March 14 against the proposed higher excise taxes on a broadened list of their products. Vacuum cleaner men said the Treasury was trying to put a tax on cleanliness, sewing machine makers said a tax on their products would be a tax on clothing, and food freezer men said frozen meals stored in rural freeze lockers would be invaluable in case of an atomic attack.

The witness list included G. C. Nussy, of the White Sewing Machine Co., Walter Wendler, assistant sales manager, Amana Refrigeration, Inc. Thomas F. Kelly, Vacuum Cleaner Manufacturers Association and Walter F. Muhlbach, president of the Institute of Cooking and Heating Appliance Manufacturers.

Rowland Jones, president of the American Retail Federation, said his organization was willing to accept a retail sales tax as an emergency levy that had "few if any exemptions."

Benjamin C. Sigal, representing the International Union of Electrical Workers-CIO, protested increases in selected excise taxes on such items as radios, cars and gasoline. The proposed increase in radio and television set taxes was criticized by Robert C. Sprague, president of Sprague Electric Co., Mort Farr, president of the National Appliance and Radio Dealers Association, and Ralph W. Hardy, of the National Association of Broadcasters.

Hearings Conclude

The Committee March 19 wound up six weeks of public hearings on the Administration's requested $10 billion boost in the nation's taxes. Most of the final day's witnesses were members of Congress, who protested against revenue-raising proposals Secretary Snyder advanced Feb. 5.

Members from Southwestern States objected to the suggestion that the 27.5 per cent depletion allowance on oil and gas production be cut to 15 per cent. Sen. A. S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.) said the change would result in less revenue, and would "jeopardize our oil supply for the defense effort and our petroleum-propelled civilian economy." Appearing with Monroney were Rep. Toby Morris (D Okla.), and Texas Reps. Ed Gossett, O. C. Fisher. Tom Pickett, and Omar Burleson, all Democrats.

Rep. Charles W. Vursell (R Ill.) and Sen. George W. Malone (R Nev.) also opposed the allowance slash. Malone, moreover, contended allowance on metallic minerals should be raised from 15 to 27.5 per cent.

Sens. Clyde R. Hoey (D N.C.) and Willis Smith (D N.C.) urged the Committee to reject the proposed increase in cigarette taxes.

Protests against the Treasury Department's plan to raise wine taxes were lodged by Reps. Hubert B. Scudder (R Calif.) and Leroy Johnson (R Calif.). Johnson and Rep. Walt Horan (R Wash.) also opposed the Administration request for a tax levy on interest from future issues of state and municipal bonds.

Rep Fred L. Crawford (R Mich.) said non-military spending should first be reduced, the standard work week increased to 48 hours, for the double purpose of increasing production and providing a broader tax base at existing rates, and all tax "loopholes" closed.

Study of Bill

With hearings out of the way, the Committee started a section-by-section study of the tax bill in closed sessions.

On April 1, Secretary of the Treasury Snyder told the Committee only $10 billion in additional taxes would be needed in 1951 and that further taxes could be postponed until January, 1952.

By April 2, however, Snyder was still more optimistic. He told a news conference that if Congress voted a $10 billion tax increase, and if defense costs didn't rise unexpectedly, the Administration might not have to ask for more revenue in 1952.

The Secretary explained that the new fiscal picture was based on the prospect of a budget surplus at the end of the 1951 fiscal year and the good chance that the fiscal 1952 budget would be balanced.

He attributed the brighter outlook to greater-than-anticipated tax collections and smaller-than-anticipated expenditures. Instead of a $2.7 billion deficit at the end of fiscal 1951, as was originally thought probable, he said a $3 billion surplus was expected.

Committee Decisions

After lengthy consideration, the Committee started voting on provisions of the tax bill April 30. Some decisions were revised repeatedly, but as the results of each day's voting were made public, the reduced tax bill began to take shape.

The Committee finished its long work of revision June 14. In a nutshell, the Committee's final bill called for increases approximating $2,847,000,000 in individual income taxes, $2,855,000,000 in corporate income levies and excess-profits taxes, $1,252,000,000 in increased excise taxes, including a new tax on gambling and $245 million in miscellaneous provisions, including the closing of some tax "loopholes," the broadening of others, and technical changes in existing revenue procedures.

Report

By a vote of 19 to 6, the Ways and Means Committee June 15 approved the completed draft. It was introduced as a bill (HR 4473) the same day by Chairman Doughton. Four Republicans joined the 15 Democrats in voting to send the bill to the House floor. All 10 Republicans, nevertheless, joined June 18 in signing the minority report criticizing the measure as far short of ideal.

The ballot was not made public, but an unofficial tally indicated:

For the bill: Robert L. Doughton (D N.C.), Jere Cooper (D Tenn.), John D. Dingell (D Mich.), Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.), Noble J. Gregory (D Ky.), A. Sidney Camp (D Ga.), Aime J. Forand (D R.I.), Herman P. Eberharter (D Pa.), Cecil R. King (D Calif.), Thomas J. O'Brien (D Ill.), J. M. Combs (D Tex.), Hale Boggs (D La.), Eugene J. Keogh (D N.Y.), Walter K. Granger (D Utah), Burr P. Harrison (D Va.), Roy O. Woodruff (R Mich.), Robert W. Kean (R N.J.), Hal Holmes (R Wash.) and John W. Byrnes (R Wis.).

Against the bill: Daniel A. Reed (R N.Y.), Thomas A. Jenkins (R Ohio), Richard M. Simpson (R Pa.), Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.), Noah M. Mason (R Ill.) and Thomas E. Martin (R Iowa.).

The Republicans got the jump on the Committee's majority by making public June 18 their minority dissent. The majority report backing the bill was filed June 19.

Presenting arguments which for the most part they later reiterated on the floor, the Republicans demanded an immediate 10 per cent cut in non-military spending and elimination of all non-essential expenditures by the armed forces. "The Truman Administration is under the false illusion that pay-as-we-go means only a one-way street of ever-increasing expenditures paved with higher taxes," the minority declared.

The majority report defended the tax bill as proper and necessary. It would increase the over-all tax revenue from individuals by 31.4 per cent over the amount which would have been due under the pre-Korean tax laws and increase corporate taxes 57.9 per cent over the same level. (This included the Revenue Act and the Excess-Profits Tax Act of 1950.)

Rules Commitee Clearance

The House Rules Commitee June 19 cleared the revenue bill for House floor action under the "closed rule" procedure barring any floor amendments by individual members. Provision was made for one motion to recommit.

FLOOR ACTION

The bill would have reached the floor June 20, but it was Calendar Wednesday and House members refused — on a standing vote, 72-138 to dispense with the regular procedure and clear the decks for the tax measure. The motion to dispense with Calendar Wednesday received a majority but fell short of the two-thirds vote it required.

However, the House did make its decision on the Rules Committee "closed rule" — accepting it by a single vote. There was, first, a 98 to 98 (standing vote) tie on the no-amendment plan, but Francis E. Walter (D Pa.), temporary Speaker, cast the deciding vote in favor of the proposal.

Chairman Doughton of the Ways and Means Commitee June 21 opened debate on the bill. He endorsed the proposed tax increase as urgently needed to finance the nation's defense program. But he told his colleagues: "I consider it unlikely that we shall be able to increase substantially the yield of the federal tax system beyond what is included in the present bill. . .Higher tax rates on individuals or corporations or excises would be exceedingly burdensome and difficult to impose."

Daniel A. Reed (R N.Y.), the senior Republican on the Ways and Means Committee, described the measure as "a bill to authorize the bureaucrats to turn the taxpayers' pockets inside out." If enacted, he said, it would fulfill the dream of the "hard core of the Socialist planners within the Truman Administration." He demanded that the Administration cut back its spending program to keep the nation solvent.

Republicans in general condemned the bill as unbalanced and unnecessarily large. They centered their criticism on the individual and corporation tax increases. Inflation, waste, and lack of individual incentive would be the only results, they warned.

Demands Spending Cuts

Joseph W. Martin, Jr. (R. Mass.) urged that tax increases be curtailed until the Administration cut "non-defense expenditures to the bone and hold(s) military expenditures to essentials. . . (Then) no increases in taxes will be necessary." He also urged that tax increases be withheld until the appropriations for the next fiscal year were known.

Warning that the huge tax bill would cause "real suffering," Simpson, a member of the Ways and Means Committee, said the net effect of the bill would be inflationary. "The more we tax," he said, "the more (the Administration) will continue spending."

Leslie C. Arends (R Ill.) said he never had encountered a tax bill "so unsatisfactory in so many particulars."

Democrats declared the tax bill necessary to the nation's defense program. They contended that the Committee had devised the most equitable bill possible. Although he agreed with Republicans that non-defense spending should be cut, Doughton urged passage to pay for the nation's expanding preparedness program.

Democratic Leader John W. McCormack (Mass.) declared, "There will be no tax bill at all if we don't pass this one." Toby Morris (D Okla.) told the House that in view of large appropriations there was no way to escape increases in taxes unless there was deficit spending. Reminding House members of various foreign commitments, he declared "There is nothing left but to pay for these commitments and this must be done by raising taxes."

Recommittal Move Loses

Republican efforts to send the bill back to the Ways and Means Committee were blocked when a recommittal motion was defeated June 22 on a 171-220 roll-call vote.

Party lines were followed in general on the motion to recommit the bill. Only one Democrat, Edward A. Garmatz (D Md.), voted with 170 Republicans for recommittal. Against the motion were 205 Democrats, 14 Republicans and one independent.

The bill was then passed on roll-call vote, 233-160. (For voting, see page 540.)

On final passage of the bill, 36 Republicans and the one independent, Frazier Reams (Ohio), voted with 196 Democrats in support of the bill. Opposing it were 149 Republicans and 11 Democrats.

Senate

Summary — The Senate Finance Committee took testimony from more than 100 persons in hearings that lasted from June 27 through Aug. 16. Much of the testimony was similar to that given in the House. It took the group more than a month, after hearings closed, to agree on detailed revisions of the House-passed bill.

The Senate then debated the measure for nine days, revising it further.

SENATE'S PROVISIONS

As passed by the Senate, the bill would have increased annual taxes by $5.5 billion, compared with $7.2 billion for the original House-approved measure. Here were the major provisions of the Senate-passed bill.

Income Taxes

Corporations: Raise normal rate from 25 per cent to 27 per cent and surtax rate from 22 per cent to 25 per cent, giving a top bracket combined rate on normal and surtaxes of 52 per cent. Set ceiling of 17 per cent on amount that can be taken in excess profits. Retain average earnings credit for excess-profits tax at 85 per cent of the earnings in the three best years in the four-year period, 1946-49. Effective April 1, 1951.

Capital gains: Make no change in maximum capital gains tax rate of individuals or corporations.

Individuals: Increase by 11 per cent existing tax liabilities or by eight per cent on income after existing taxes, whichever were less; raise maximum effective rate limitation from 87 per cent to 88 per cent. Effective Nov. 1, 1951 and to terminate Dec. 31, 1953.

Single persons: Single persons who are heads of households will get one-fourth the benefits that married taxpayers had over single taxpayers from income splitting.

Tax Exempt Organizations

Cooperatives: Levy corporation tax on earnings not allocated or distributed to patron members. Require cooperatives to report payment or allocation of dividends which exceed $100.

Mutual savings banks and savings and loan associations: Impose corporation tax on earnings but allow deductions for losses on loans and amounts paid to depositors or credited to their accounts. Also provide for a minimum of 15 per cent of income to be set aside tax-free for reserves or a larger percentage set aside as long as total reserves, surplus and undivided profits did not exceed 10 per cent of the total deposits.

Educational institutions: Grant educational institutions until Dec. 31, 1955, to integrate unrelated business activities. Exempt income derived from feeder corporations for years prior to 1951 but extend tax on income from unrelated business to include those held by state or other government universities and colleges.

Excise Taxes

Distilled spirits: Increase tax from $9 to $10.50 a proof gallon and increase draw-back where used in food, medicine, etc., from $6 to $9.50 a gallon (decreasing net tax from $3 to $1.) Increase annual occupational tax for retail liquor dealers from $27.50 to $50, wholesale dealers from $110 to $200.

Beer: Increase from $8 to $9 a barrel. Increase annual occupational tax on wholesale dealers from $55 to $100.

Wine: Increase tax about 12.5 per cent.

Cigarettes: Increase from seven to eight cents tax on package of 20 cigarettes.

Tobacco: Decrease tax on snuff and fine-cut scrap plug and twist chewing tobacco and smoking tobacco from 18 cents a pound to 10 cents.

Gasoline: Increase tax from 1.5 cents to two cents a gallon.

Automobiles, motorcycles: Increase tax from seven to 10 per cent and remove tax on house trailers.

Automobile trucks, busses, and truck trailers and automotive parts and accessories: Increase tax from five to eight per cent.

Appliances (electric, gas and oil): Make no change in rates but broaden to include: Garbage disposal units, exhaust blowers, certain belt - driven fans, clothes driers, door chimes, dehumidifiers, dishwashers, floor polishers and waxers, food choppers and grinders, hedge trimmers, ice cream freezers, mangles, motion or still picture projectors, pants pressers, power lawn mowers, electric sheets and spreads.

Tires for toys, etc.: Exempt from five-cents-a-pound tax tires less than 20 inches in diameter.

Sporting goods: Increase tax from 10 to 15 per cent but exempt fishing equipment, children's sleds, and sporting goods used primarily by schools and children.

Photographic apparatus and film: Reduce tax on apparatus from 25 to 15 per cent, retain 15 per cent tax on film and provide that tax on colored film is not to exceed that on black and white film.

Electrical energy: Repeal tax entirely.

Pens and pencils: Impose 10 per cent manufacturers tax on fountain and ball-point pens and mechanical pencils.

Communication, navigation and detection radio: Exempt from tax type used in commercial, military or marine installations when sold to U.S. for government use.

Mechanical lighters: Impose a 10 per cent manufacturers tax.

Toilet preparations: Exempt from 20 per cent retail tax baby oils, powders and lotions and preparations used in barber and beauty shops.

Domestic telegraph, cable, and radio messages: Reduce tax from 25 to 15 per cent.

Long-distance telephone calls: Exempt from 25 per cent tax calls made by members of armed services from combat zones.

Transportation: Exempt fishing boat trips from tax on transportation of persons and exempt amounts charged for transportation by vessels making intermediate stops in U.S., Canada, or Mexico if passengers were not discharged or picked up. Exempt from tax on transportation of property charges made for removal of earth, or other excavated material.

Admissions: Exempt benefit performances if proceeds went to churches, educational organizations which maintain regular faculties, curricula and student bodies, charitable organizations which were supported wholly or in part by government of state or any political subdivision or supported by contributions, non-profit community supported symphony orchestras or operas, National Guard organizations, reserve officers' organizations, veterans organizations, police or fire departments—providing admissions to benefits were not for motion pictures, wrestling or boxing matches, carnivals, rodeos or circuses with paid professionals or athletic contests (unless proceeds of such events went to elementary or secondary schools). Exempt athletic games if proceeds were donated to crippled children's hospitals.

Free admissions: Exempt from tax and in case of admissions at reduced rates apply the tax only to amount actually paid.

Samples: Exempt miniature samples of beauty preparations.

Wagering: Impose 10 per cent tax on wagers placed with bookmakers and lottery operators and annual occupational tax of $50 on persons accepting such wagers, and impose penalties.

Miscellaneous

Withholding on dividends, interest, and royalties: Require no withholding.

Surtax exemption and minimum excess-profits tax credit of related corporations: Make available to each member of a group or chain of related corporations the $25,000 corporate surtax exemption and the $25,000 minimum credit under the excess-profits tax.

Insurance companies: Substitute new formula for stop-gap legislation adopted in Revenue Act of 1950 which did not substantially change income-tax liability.

Collapsible corporations: Deny capital gains treatment to sale, exchange or retirement of stock to corporations formed principally for a single, short-termed enterprise and then abolished.

Residence: Relieve from tax a gain from sale of residence if gain were used for purchase of another residence within one year after sale or if gain used in building new residence within 18 months after sale.

Depletion allowances: Extend five per cent rate to sand, gravel, slate, stone, brick and tile clay, shale, oyster shell, clam shell, granite, marble, sodium choloride, and, if from brine wells, calcium chloride, magnesium and potassium chloride and bromine. Extend 10 per cent rate to borax, fuller's earth, tripoli, refractory and fire clay, quartzite, perlite, diatomoceous earth and metallurgical and chemical grade limestones, calcium and magnesium carbonates, coal and asbestos. Extend 15 per cent rate to garnet and aplite.

Family partnerships: Recognize for tax purposes, a person owning a capital interest in a partnership in which capital was a material income - producing factor, whether or not such interest were derived by purchase or gift. Effective Dec. 31, 1938.

Coal royalties: Treat as capital gains instead of ordinary income.

Venture capital: Exempt from corporation income tax, venture companies which had as their principal purpose supplying capital to corporations principally engaged in development or exploitation of inventions, improvements or new processes or products if income were distributed substantially to stockholders.

Withholding on wages and salaries: Authorize additional withholding of wages if employer and employee agreed to it.

Sale of land with unharvested crops: Provide that capital gains treatment rather than income treatment be applied to sale of land with unharvested crops.

Joint or separate returns: Provide that married individual income taxpayers who elected to file separate returns might choose to file joint returns at any time within the period of the statute of limitations. Provide that individuals using standard deduction might substitute or amend itemized deductions at any time within period of the statute of limitations.

Medical expenses: Remove five per cent limitation with regard to deductible medical expenses if taxpayer or wife were 65 years or over.

Corporate reorganization: Recognize for tax purposes the gain from the receipt of stock in corporate exchanges when a corporation established a new firm and distributed stock of new firm to stockholders of corporation.

Gains from sale of livestock: Provide that capital gains treatment be extended to livestock held for 12 months for breeding, draft or dairy purposes and to turkeys used for breeding purposes.

Expense allowances: Eliminate tax-free provision on expense allowances of President, Vice President, Speaker of House and Members of Congress.

Excess Profits (Structural)

Tax Relief: Provide excess-profits tax relief for new corporations, corporations suffering catastrophes and others needing special aid.

Mine exploration expenditures: Provide that with respect to expenditures made prior to development stage of mine, taxpayer might deduct exploration expenses up to $75,000 annually or defer up to $75,000 not deducted in current year and deduct amount ratably as minerals which were located as the result of exploration are sold.

HEARINGS

The Senate Finance Committee began consideration of the tax bill in a closed session June 27 which was followed by open hearings June 28.

Secretary of the Treasury Snyder, lead-off witness at the open hearings, urged that the $7.2 billion House tax bill be boosted by $3 billion — making it the $10 billion originally requested by President Truman.

Snyder, calling the House bill insufficient, said it threatened to put the Government in the red and add to inflationary pressures. He suggested that the $3 billion increase be obtained from two areas — individual income taxes and selective excise taxes. He proposed a one-percentage - point increase in tax rates on individual income — an additional $1 on every $100.

On July 2 Eric Johnston, Economic Stabilization Director, told the Committee at least $10 billion should be raised in new revenue to achieve a pay-as-we-go program in financing the "billion - dollar - a - week mobilization program." Johnston said that without an adequate tax bill it would be "almost impossible" to keep prices and wages on an even keel.

Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) said it might be hard to justify the big tax boost when the government had a $3 billion surplus in the fiscal year just ended June 30. Johnston predicted that the Federal Treasury would be on a $1 billion deficit basis in the first quarter of fiscal 1952.

Charles E. Wilson, Director of Defense Mobilization, appeared July 3 to caution against lowering taxes on the prospect of a Korean settlement. He stated that a tax program "must be based, not upon the Korean fighting, but upon what we know to be the ultimate aims and present tactics of the Soviet Union."

Although Wilson endorsed a $10 billion tax hike, he added that such high tax rates could not be maintained in peacetime beyond 1955 without wrecking the nation's economy. The alternatives to heavy tax boosts, Wilson said, were borrowing or cutting the defense program. The first, he added, would expose the nation "to all the evils of inflation" and the second he termed "unthinkable."

3.5 Million Force

Anna M. Rosenberg, Assistant Defense Secretary, followed Wilson and declared it was essential to maintain 3.5 million men in the armed forces — regardless of when the Korean fighting ends.

Both John D. Small, Munitions Board Chairman, and W. J. McNeil, Assistant Defense Secretary, told the Committee July 3 that the nation could not be diverted from its defense program. McNeil estimated that from $2 to $3 billion will have to be added to the defense budget if the Korean war continued.

Charles R. Sligh, chairman of the National Association of Manufacturers' Tax Committeee, July 5 recommended a "broad consumption tax" rather than a corporation tax increase to balance the budget. The industry spokesman said the manufacturers' excise tax — levied against the amount of materials a firm produces — should be imposed on all products except food and should be collected at the manufacturers' level.

Dr. Willford I. King, representing the Committee for Constitutional Government, also approved increased excise taxes to meet federal spending needs. He said the House tax bill would destroy incentive, particularly in the higher income-tax brackets.

The Committee heard criticism of the taxing policy applied to American firms abroad. Mitchell B. Carroll, counsel for the National Foreign Trade Council of New York, told the Senators the U.S. levied taxes at U.S. rates against American companies operating abroad and allowed a credit for taxes paid in the foreign country. Carroll suggested that income of American firms abroad should be taxed only in the country in which it was earned.

Appearing July 5 was Louis J. Walinsky, of the Americans for Democratic Action, who favored high corporation and individual tax rates but opposed any excise tax increase. Harry Silverson, of the New York Lawyers Association, urged the group to permit taxpayers with earned income who were not covered by qualifying pension plans to create within certain limits self-operating pension funds through the purchase of special-type non-assignable U.S. Government bonds.

Support Sales Tax

A federal retail sales tax — rather than a manufacturers' excise tax—was urged by representatives of retail trade groups July 6. The plan was supported by John F. Lebor of the American Retail Federation, Ralph W. Button of the National Retail Dry Goods Association and M. L. Seidman of the New York Board of Trade. Committee members were somewhat less hostile to the federal retail sales tax proposal than they had been to the manufacturers' excise tax proposal. However, Tom Connally (D Tex.) accused the witnesses of transferring taxation from themseves to consumers.

Angus McDonald, representing the National Farmers Union, opposed the retail sales tax and suggested Congress increase tax rates in the upper income brackets, increase corporate taxes and concentrate on closing tax loopholes.

Other witnesses appearing July 6 were Milton Young, a New York tax attorney, and David W. Herrmann of the National Association of Shoe Chain Stores. Both opposed limiting related corporations to a single surtax exemption and excess-profits-tax credit. Thomas N. Tarleau of the National Retail Furniture Association asked the Senators to provide relief for businesses that paid corporation income taxes on the installment basis.

Robert A. Gilbert of the Committee of Investors of America, Inc., testifying on capital gains provisions, protested the tax burden imposed by the House bill.

On July 9, Senators heard Roswell Magill, former Undersecretary of the Treasury, (1937-38) offer sharp criticism of the House tax bill. Magill, chairman of the Committee on Federal Tax Policy, said the bill would promote, rather than retard inflation and said it was aimed at middle and upper income groups.

Allan B. Kline, American Farm Bureau president, said July 9 that a tax hike was a better way of combatting inflation than wage and price controls. Russ Nixon of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America urged that taxes on lower income groups be eased.

Small Business Relief

Jules Eshner, of Smaller Business of America, urged the Committee to provide relief for small businesses under the Excess Profits Tax Act and to hit larger business firms harder through higher corporation income taxes.

Fifteen witnesses appeared July 10. Favoring federal retail sales tax were J. Cameron Thomson, representing the Committee for Economic Development; Benjamin Javits, president of Independent Investors, Inc., and William Jackman, president of Investors League, Inc.

For Industry

Industry spokesmen July 12 asked Congress to retain — in some cases, increase — the depletion allowances.

James W. Haley, National Coal Association spokesman, and John D. Jillson, secretary of the Anthracite Institute, both urged that the coal allowance be increased above 10 per cent. W. N. Engelback of the Ruberoid Company said the depletion allowance for asbestos should be increased from five to 15 per cent. W. P. Hamblen, who spoke for the operators dredging fossil shell from the Gulf of Mexico, said the five per cent allowance for that industry was too small.

Urging that the five per cent depletion allowance granted for slate in the House Bill be retained, W. F. Bronkie, representing slate producers in six states, testified July 12. However, A. C. Ford of the Southern Lightweight Aggregate Corp., urged that the slate used in the manufacture of lightweight aggregates be granted a 15 per cent allowance.

Thomas N. Tarleau, representing the Builder and Owner Coordinating Committee, Inc., asked the group to reject a House provision to limit related corporations to one corporate tax exemption and a single excess-profits tax return.

J. Rutledge Hill, of the National Sand and Gravel Association asked that depletion allowances be increased July 13. Others requesting a 15 per cent depletion allowance were Lloyd P. Webre, president of the United Salt Corp.; Horace C. Krause, president of the Columbia Quarry Company of St. Louis, Mo.; Fred C. Fernald of Godfrey L. Cabot, Inc., for an allowance on a newly - produced mineral , wollastonite; and Russell Rarey, of the National Crushed Stone Association.

Also testifying on percentage depletion were Charles E. Brady of the National Industrial Sand Association; B. V. Hedrick of the Gravel and Sand Company of Salisbury, N.J.; E. J. Grassman of the Georgia Kaolin Company, Elizabeth, N.J.; and Dr. Charles A. Stockes of Godfrey L. Cabot, Inc.

For Labor

Another labor organization asked July 16 for a $10 billion tax boost. Stanley H. Ruttenberg, representing the CIO, proposed that half this amount come from corporation taxes, that $2.5 billion from ending the split income provision, and another $2.5 billion from an additional tax hike on individual incomes. He urged the Committee to reject any excise tax hikes or sales taxes. The CIO spokesman also urged the Senators to exempt from the 12.5 increase taxable income of $1,000 or less.

Arthur Schutzer appeared for the American Labor Party and termed the House bill a "bipartisan tax measure now threatening the American people." He recommended lower income taxes on individuals and an increase of $7 billion in corporation taxes.

Charles C. Hertwig of the American Cotton Manufacturers Institute told the group that most of the defense money needs could be met without tax increases. He added that production could maintain a better rate if not retarded by overtaxation. A spokesman for the Associated General Contractors of America, George C Koss, asked the group to eliminate "undue hardship" on contractors by permitting them to treat as a net operating loss the difference between replacement cost of heavy equipment and the original cost.

Calvin K. Snyder, representing the National Association of Real Estate Boards, favored the House provision that exempts home owners from the capital gains tax when they sell their home and buy another within a year.

A. R. Kaiser of Sears, Roebuck Company urged the group to make adjustments in the taxing methods used for employees retiring who chose to take their share of the retiring fund in stock.

Merrill Griswold of the American Research and Development Corp., proposed an amendment to encourage the formation of venture-capital investment pools. Mrs. Enid H. Griswold, representing the National Economic Council, Inc., protested against the House bill. She termed the tax increases as "unnecessary" and "a threat to the economic structure of our country."

For Insurance Firms

Five insurance company spokesmen appeared July 17 and objected to the existing method of taxing life insurance companies.

A plan to tax the companies through a 6.5 per cent levy on net income investment was proposed by Claris Adams who represented the American Life Convention and the Life Insurance Association of America. The plan was endorsed by three other representatives: John A. Lloyd, Union Central Life Insurance Co.; Cecil Woods, Volunteer State Life Insurance Co., and Albert Linton, Provident Mutual Life Insurance Co.

Objecting to the plan was Edward J. Schmuck of Acacia Mutual Life Insurance Co. Schmuck said the flat levy would be unfair to companies that did not have any excess of net investment income after they met requirements for reserves. He suggested a modification of the existing system to provide a tax reduction of up to 50 per cent for those companies which needed all their investment income for reserves.

For Other Groups

The National Grange went on record July 18 supporting the $10 billion tax plan. Grange Master Herschel D. Newsom told the Committee the boost was justified to put the defense program on a pay-as-you-go basis. He supported the Treasury's proposal of a four percentage point hike in each bracket.

Senators were asked not to change the special tax benefits provided for the mining industry. The request came from Henry B. Fernald of the American Mining Congress who said the Administration's recommendation of lowering depletion allowances would weaken incentive to produce vital defense minerals.

Lee P. Miller of the American Bankers Association and H. H. Cooley of the Virginia Bankers Association both appeared in opposition to the 20 per cent withholding on the income from dividends and interest on corporate bonds.

Also appearing July 18 was Horace Russell, U.S. Savings and Loan League, who opposed the taxation of savings and mutual savings institutions. Hubert M. Rhodes of the Credit Union National Association, Inc., proposed retention of the tax-exemptions of credit unions.

Co-op Taxation

Three witnesses appeared July 19 to urge the group to end what they called unfair discrimination by exempting cooperatives from taxation. R. C. Booth of the Grain and Feed Dealers National Association, testified that unless competing farm co-ops were taxed, they would drive private firms out of business.

The National Tax Equality Association was represented by Garner M. Lester, president, and Prof. O. Glenn Saxon of Yale University. Saxon advocated levies on co-op patronage dividends, which were distributed to members in cash or merchandise.

Carl D. Loos of Chicago, appearing for the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives, offered figures which showed, he said, that co-ops had not been able to take over an increasing share of farm marketing because of their tax exemption.

Ralph E. Burgess, New York, representing the National Tax Equality Association, told the Committee the U.S. could get $1,180,000,000 in additional revenue ($264,000,000 from co-ops) by taxing organizations now exempt.

Burgess' estimate was disputed by a Treasury representative, Thomas Leahy. He said the government estimate of such revenue was $70,000,000 a year and that if only the undistributed earnings of co-ops were taxed, the yield would be $25.000,000. Still a third estimate came from C. Emory Glander, Columbus, Ohio, attorney, representing the National Tax Equality Association. His estimate was $21,100,000 annually if the co-ops' patronage refunds were included in the tax base.

Donald P. Lloyd, Salt Lake City, appearing for the Cooperative Food Distributors of America, urged the committee not to remove tax advantages given the wholesale grocery cooperatives movement because wholesale cooperatives, he said, were the salvation of small retailer grocers in competing with the big chains.

Cripple Co-ops?

Charles W. Holman, Washington, secretary of the National Milk Producers Federation, told the Senators those "who ostensibly advocate tax equality" actually "have as their direct objective crippling and annihilating farmer cooperatives."

Jerry Voorhis, Chicago, executive secretary of the Cooperative League of America, testified that patronage refunds, in whatever form paid, were not the property of the cooperative but of the patron and could not in justice be taxed against the cooperative.

A Washington attorney, Joseph O'Connell, Jr., also representing the National Tax Equality Association, told the Committee that what co-ops call "savings" actually are the same as corporation profits. But Wilfrid E. Rumble, St. Paul, an attorney, contended that no income in the true sense was produced by a co-op's transactions. He represented the National Federation of Grain Cooperatives.

As hearings continued July 23, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce said Congress need not hike taxes because the budget for the current year "can be balanced without additional revenue." And the Council of State Chambers of Commerce denounced the House-passed $7.2 billion tax increase proposal as the "worst of its kind in the history of the country."

The council's views were set forth by Clarence D. Laylin, Columbus, Ohio, chairman of the taxation section of the Council's federal finance committee. The U.S. Chamber's position was outlined by Ellsworth C. Alvord, chairman of the organization's federal finance committee.

Ship Owners, Railroads

Appearing as vice president of the Association of American Ship Owners, former Sen. Joseph H. Ball (R Minn.) asked for consideration of a tax relief provision for unsubsidized shipping companies.

A spokesman for the nation's railroads told the Committee July 24 that provisions in the pending tax increase might make it impossible for railroads to meet expanding defense demands. J. Carter Fort, vice president and general counsel for the Association of American Railroads, said unlike other industries "railroads do not have the same freedom to discontinue or curtail operations, even though they be unprofitable."

Fort said raising the corporate tax rate from 47 to 52 per cent as advocated would seriously impair ability of railroads to obtain new freight cars and other facilities required for the defense program.

Protests against the new tax status on multiple or related corporations came from J. Stanley Halperin, New York City, appearing for the Women's Apparel Chains Association, and B. N. Burnstine, Washington, speaking for the National Association of Credit Jewelers. Halperin asked that the higher tax rates for affiliated corporations apply only when they are an "artificial, unbusinesslike enterprise." Burnstine said that new provisions would boost taxes as much as 122 per cent for two stores in his association with less than $25,000 profits each.

Frank S. Boice, representing the National Live Stock Tax Committee, proposed an amendment on tax treatment of sales of livestock held for draft, breeding, or dairy purposes.

Walter R. Truland, speaking for the Governmental Affairs Committee of the National Electrical Contractors Association, July 26, called the excess-profits tax law "a serious deterrent to the national defense production effort."

Credits Inadequate?

John B. Poole, representing the Television Broadcasters' Tax Committee, said July 27 that tax credits granted under existing laws were inadequate. He added that "some reasonable return" on investment should be available as a credit before the excess-profits tax applied.

A spokesman for the National Association of Investment Companies, Fred W. Morrison, said existing tax laws were forcing investment companies to distribute all their capital gains to share-holders. He said such action which tended to influence the investment policy of the companies, was taken because the capital gains, if retained by the companies, would be subject to a higher — a 25 per cent — tax.

On Beverage Taxes

On July 30 the Committee received testimony from witnesses on the proposed excise taxes on alcoholic beverages. Benjamin Josephs of the National Retail Liquor Package Stores Association, Lawrence H. Eldredge of Pennsylvania Alcoholic Beverage Study, Inc., Ralph T. Heymsfeld, Distilled Spirits Institute, and Edward Hock of the Alcohol Control Board, Newark, N.J., all said a tax increase on liquor would promote illegal sales.

Clinton M. Hester of the U.S. Brewers Foundation, said the point of diminishing returns had been reached in taxes on beer. Fred Sweet, Hotel and Restaurant Employees and Bartenders, International Union, said any rise in liquor costs would tend to reduce the need for thousands of employees in hotels, restaurants and taverns.

John Caffey of the Wine Conference of America told the group that wine sales had dropped, the Department of Agriculture had predicted a record grape crop, and the wine industry could not stand any tax hike. Emmett McGinn, National Licensed Beverage Association, told the group that tavern owners were hard hit by rising liquor prices caused by taxes. Consumers bought for home consumption, he said. Frank K. Sims, Alcohol Beverage Control Board, Charlotte, N.C., said that the states received considerable revenue from liquor taxes but this would decline if taxes pushed liquor costs upward.

Norman Feldman of the Wine and Spirits Wholesalers of America said estimates of additional revenue from increased liquor taxes were erroneous because they were based on the early months of the Korean war when wholesalers and retailers, anticipating shortages, stockpiled. Harry L. Lourie, National Association of Alcohol Beverage Importers, also protested the proposed tax increase.

Auto Industry

The automobile industry July 31 advocated a general manufacturers excise tax on everything except food to replace proposed tax increases on a selected list of items. A. E. Barit, chairman of the Automobile Manufacturers Association, suggested the manufacturers tax be set at five per cent and that taxes already in excess of five per cent be rolled back to that level—including the existing seven per cent auto tax. The House raised this to 10 per cent.

Earl Raymond of the Trailercoach Manufacturers Association, and Hal McPherson of McPherson, Inc., both opposed the excise tax on trailer coaches.

H. L. Bollum, American Transit Association, Charles C. Freed, National Automobile Dealers Association, and Charles C. Collins, American Automobile Association, opposed any increases in excise taxes on automobiles and automotive parts.

Edgar S. Idol of the American Trucking Association, said there was no justification for the House increases in excises affecting trucks. House proposals included raising the five per cent excise tax on trucks and accessories to eight per cent, a one-half cent a gallon hike in the gasoline tax and a new two cent levy on diesel fuel used in highway vehicles.

Counsel for the National Federation of American Shipping, A. U. Krebs, asked the Senators to reject a new tax proposed in the House bill applied to oil companies which transported their product in their own tankers.

John J. Canelli of the National Bowling Council opposed an increase in the excises taxes on bowling alleys.

A representative of the private electric power industry urged Congressmen Aug. 1, to impose a corporation income tax on publicly owned utilities. Charles E. Oakes of the Edison Electric Institute estimated revenue of $107 million from such a levy and said "tax discrimination" threatened the existence of private companies. John H. Hessey of the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners urged the levying of an excise tax — paid by the consumer in electric bills — rather than an increase of the corporate rate on regulated utilities.

Alan W. Crowell of the Flint Lighter Manufacturers Group opposed the new 20 per cent excise tax on mechanical lighters.

Also appearing Aug. 1 was Edward Ingraham of the Clock Manufacturers Association of America, who asked for the repeal of excise taxes on clocks and non-jeweled watches. J. R. Poteat of the National Electrical Manufacturers Association urged extension of the excise tax base to cover furniture, rugs, china and many other household items.

A spokesman for the Vacuum Cleaners Manufacturers Association, Thomas F. Kelly, voiced approval of the House's rejection of a 25 per cent excise tax on vacuum cleaners. The Treasury had backed such a proposal. Mort Farr of the National Appliance and Radio Dealers Association asked the Committee not to raise the tax on television sets to 25 per cent as the Treasury requested.

Non-Profit Groups

On Aug. 2 George A. Sloan, chairman of the Board of the Metropolitan Opera Company, asked the Committee to endorse the House action which exempted non-profit organizations such as opera companies from the admissions tax. A similar request came from Floyd G. Blair of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Society. However Abram Myers of the Council of Motion Pictures Organizations opposed the removal of the admissions tax on non-profit, charitable and religious groups.

Two witnesses Aug. 2 criticized the admissions tax. Mrs. Helen Thompson of the American Symphony Orchestra Association, sought exemption from the tax for small orchestras, and Bligh A. Dodds of the International Association of Fairs and Expositions, requested that the tax on state and county fairs admissions be ended.

Sen. Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) and J. C. Lanier of the National Tobacco Tax Research Council, Inc., said the tax load on the cigar industry was too heavy and that an increase would be "ruinous." Edward J. Regensberg, representing the Cigar Manufacturers Association, urged the Committee to follow House action and reject a $25 million annual increase in cigar taxes, proposed by the Treasury.

Also appearing on Aug. 2 was Robert C. Sprague of the Radio-Television Manufacturers Association who asked the group not to raise the 10 per cent excise tax on TV sets. Ralph W. Hardy of the National Association of Radio and Television Broadcasters asked that the 10 per cent levy be taken off.

Rep. Albert P. Morano (R Conn.) requested that the 10 per cent excise tax imposed on electric shavers be removed. Removal of the excise tax on radio equipment used for communication, navigation and detection was urged by Leo G. Horney of the Bendix Radio Division of the Bendix Aviation Corp.

Urges Sales Tax

Louis Ruthenburg, spokesman for the National Committee for Fair Emergency Excise Taxation, urged adoption of an emergency federal retail sales tax to replace the existing excise tax on selected items. He argued that a retail sales tax would be more effective in combatting inflation.

James V. Carmichael, representing the Fountain Pen and Mechanical Pencil Manufacturers Association, Inc., asked the Committee to reject a House provision extending the 20 per cent excise tax to all types of fountain pens, ball point pens and mechanical pencils. Thomas F. McMains, vice president of the Western Union Telegraph Co., sought reduction from the 25 per cent excise tax on telegraph messages to 10 per cent. John J. Wicker, Jr., of the American Mutual Alliance protested against previous testimony which inferred that mutual fire and casualty insurance firms paid no tax.

Senators were asked to approve a House provision exempting ballrooms from the 20 per cent cabaret tax on refreshments sold at the establishments. The request came from J. A. Osherman of the National Ballroom Operators Association.

Rewriting Begins

That testimony ended the regular hearings on the tax bill. More than six weeks had been devoted to the measure. An extensive job of rewriting the House bill, behind closed doors, then began.

The Committee paused briefly Aug. 15 and 16 to hear testimony from Senators who were not members of the group.

On Aug. 15 Pat McCarran (D Nev.) asked the group to delete the gambling tax provision passed by the House. It applied to both legal and illegal gambling and McCarran protested that the proposed 10 per cent federal tax on legal gambling would seriously cut revenues in Nevada.

Thomas R. Underwood (D Ky.) protested against a proposed $1.50 a gallon increase in whiskey taxes and asked that those on chewing, plug and twist tobacco be reduced. Underwood and Wallace F. Bennett (R Utah) both favored an increase from five to 10 per cent in the depletion allowance for coal and limestone.

Sen. Holland and George A. Smathers (D Fla.) Aug. 15 opposed a Treasury recommendation on the taxation of cigars.

Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) appeared Aug. 16 to urge provisions aimed at gamblers.

Committee

The Finance Committee started a long series of votes on provisions of the bill Aug. 21. Most of the decisions were made public on a day-to-day basis. There was much revision and backtracking before the final version of the bill was agreed on. One of the major changes made by the Senate Committee was the addition of a lengthy section of excess-profits tax relief provisions designed to benefit new corporations, those suffering catastrophes, and others needing special aid.

The Committee formally reported the bill Sept. 18. Of the total amount — $5.506 billion — to be raised by the bill, $2.367 billion would come from individual incomes; $2.060 billion from corporations, $1.275 billion from excise taxes, and $150 million from new levies on tax-exempt organizations. Other miscellaneous changes resulted in a loss of $224 million.

Meanwhile, President Truman sent a letter Sept. 20 to Vice President Alben W. Barkley renewing his request for a $10 billion tax bill. The federal government was already heavily in the red for this fiscal year, the President stated, and individual and corporation incomes were running at such high rates that they could stand greater tax boosts than the Senate bill proposed.

The President was critical of certain loopholes which, he said, were put in the bill to aid special interest groups.

FLOOR ACTION

Sen. Walter F. George (D Ga.), chairman of the Finance Committee and manager of the bill on the floor, opened debate Sept. 19. He told Members he was "convinced that we have already reached the point of diminishing returns, so far as the income tax is concerned, and that any further revenue to be raised must come from an entirely new form of taxation."

The Senate Sept. 19 adopted all Committee amendments en bloc on voice vote. It was agreed, however, that any Member might request that any amendment be opened to further changes.

Opponents said the bill would not produce enought revenue to balance the budget and termed it an invitation to inflation.

A leader of the opposition group, Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) said Oct. 20 that in addition to aiding the inflationary spiral, "the money that the tax bill does raise is distributed unfairly." In his critical denouncement of the measure, Humphrey said it was defective in three respects: Reductions made by the Committee below House figures went mainly to corporations "whose swollen profits are ample proof that they are able to pay the additional taxes imposed by the House"; too many loopholes, and the bill extended "unwarranted tax privileges and opened up new loopholes which will be available to relatively few people at the expense of the many."

Spending Estimate Disputed

Humphrey added that even the higher House bill would not be sufficient to balance the budget. He estimated spending for fiscal 1952 would exceed $70 billion. George said the figure was "wholly wrong" but Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) said Humphrey's estimate was a conservative one.

Humphrey said amendments he would propose to increase the amount of revenue would not "bankrupt anyone." His position "in a nutshell", he added, was that "people with three yachts can get along with two and people with four Cadillacs can get along with three."

Eugene D. Millikin (R Colo.) defending the bill Sept. 20, said persons with incomes of $5,000 and less received 56.2 per cent of the national income and paid 37.02 per cent of the income taxes under present laws. He said the House bill would require them to pay 37.13 per cent of the income levies and the Senate Committee bill would require them to pay 37.32 per cent.

Issue-by-issue voting began after four days of bitter debate on the bill. The Senate voted Sept. 24, 60-19, on roll call, to tax the earnings of mutual savings and savings and loan banks at corporation rates. Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) offered an amendment to meet criticism of the plan and the Senate accepted it Sept. 22, 41-28, on roll call. The amendment provided a minimum of 15 per cent of income to be set aside tax-free for reserves or a larger percentage set aside as long as total reserves, surplus and undivided profits did not exceed 10 per cent of the total deposits. (For voting, see Page 533.)

Before the final vote on this issue, the Senate accepted an amendment by Ralph E. Flanders (R Vt.) to permit the firms to deduct from gross income amounts they paid to any mutual fund set up by state law in repayment of a loan made before Sept. 1, 1951. The amendment was expected to yield $140 million to $150 million in new revenue.

Two critics of the amendments, Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.) and Irving M. Ives (R N.Y.), argued that banking legislation should not be written on the Senate floor. George became aroused when Lehman, who previously said he favored a higher tax bill, opposed the bank levy. The Georgian said the New Yorkers favored higher taxes only if they do not "come out of the swollen profits of great New York institutions." He added that "it is time someone said New York and one or two other states should not be permitted to make the tax policies of the U.S."

Sees Savings Destroyed

Lehman warned that taxation of mutual savings would eventually destroy them and called the measure a definite "step backward."

During debate Sept. 24, William E. Jenner (R Ind.) spoke out against any increase in taxes. He said he was opposed to voting any more tax dollars to an Administration "throwing away our hard-won earnings with utter recklessness." While admitting that the Finance Committee undoubtedly put together the best bill it could, Jenner stated "I must oppose a good tax bill as vigorously as I would oppose a bad tax bill."

Before the Senate agreed by voice vote Sept. 24 to accept the Committee's plan for taxing cooperatives on earnings that were not distributed or allocated to patron members, John J. Williams (R Del.) led an unsuccessful fight to get acceptance of a substitute. Under his amendment cooperatives with assets over $100,000 would have been required to allocate one - half of their earnings by means of two-year certificates to be tax exempt and distribute the remainder in cash or merchandise or pay tax on it. The Senate rejected this, 7-72.

George D. Aiken (R Vt.) said the Williams amendment "although probably not intended to do so, would be the first move toward destroying federations of cooperatives."

The Senate accepted by voice vote an amendment by George which allowed the cooperatives until the 15th day of the ninth month, rather than the third month, after the fiscal year began to make their distributions or rebates.

Excess-Profits Fight

The Administration-supported drive for stiffer excess-profits taxes and fewer relief provisions was decisively defeated Sept. 25. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.), who led the drive, severely criticized the Committee's provision dealing with excess profits. He added that the new relief provisions should not be added "until all the evidence was in."

The Senate Sept. 25 reaffirmed its earlier approval of the Committee's excess-profits section on a 70-15 roll-call vote. The section contained a series of provisions granting relief for various types of corporations under the excess-profits tax. Generally, each was designed to meet a special problem of a single corporation.

O'Mahoney suffered another defeat when the Senate accepted, 62-20, the Committee amendment concerning excess-profits tax credit. The House reduced from 85 per cent to 75 per cent the average base period net income which might be used in computing excess-profits tax credit. The Senate Committee retained the base at 85 per cent. O'Mahoney argued that profits were running at the highest rate since World War II and corporations could well afford to pay more.

During the debate, George lashed out at both O'Mahoney and the Administration. He criticized Administration spending, taxing and control policies, and accused President Truman of remaining silent on efforts to economize yet calling for more and more taxes.

Another proposal by O'Mahoney to eliminate a section providing special relief for corporations suffering catastrophies, was rejected Sept. 25 by voice vote.

On Sept. 26 another Member advocating more revenue in taxes—Lehman—was defeated, 33-54, when he offered an amendment making corporation tax rates retroactive to Jan. 1, 1951. The Senate sustained the Committee in setting April 1, 1951, as the effective date.

Lehman declared this was not the time for "mollycoddling" and said the April 1 date was a special "favor" to corporations. He estimated that his proposal would have raised $500 million in additional revenue.

Defeat Douglas Amendment

In another action Sept. 26, the Senate defeated, 15-70, an amendment by Douglas to subject corporation dividends and interest on corporate bonds to a 20 per cent withholding tax. The Senate Committee had eliminated this provision from the House bill.

The Senate Sept. 26 also defeated, 36-50, a proposal by Robert C. Hendrikson (R N.J.) which would have allowed up to $1,440 a year of pensions, retirement or annuity payments to be excluded from taxes on gross income.

Defeated, 16-72, was an amendment by Russell B. Long (D La.) to eliminate the section granting capital gains treatment to coal royalties. Humphrey lost, 27-58, in his attempt to delete a provision easing taxes on certain types of family partnerships.

The Senate adopted by voice vote an amendment by Flanders to tax the savings of mutual savings banks derived from life insurance business under the special formula applicable to life insurance companies instead of at regular corporation rates.

Another amendment adopted by voice vote on Sept. 26 was a proposal, sponsored by Frank Carlson (R Kan.) to extend tax relief benefits to individuals sustaining property losses through flood and other disasters.

On Sept. 27, Williams won acceptance, 77-11, of an amendment to eliminate the tax-free provision on the expense allowances of the President, the Vice President, Speaker of the House and Members of Congress. Williams offered his amendment the day before and Styles Bridges (R N.H.) proposed a change in it which would increase the salaries of both Senators and Representatives from $15,000 to $22,500. But Bridges withdrew his modification and offered a motion to table the Williams amendment. The Senate rejected this, 34-45.

Effective in 1953

As finally accepted, the Williams amendment would become effective Jan. 3, 1953. Originally, the date was set at Nov. 1, 1951. Williams said that "as a matter of principle, there should not be any special tax-exempt group in this country."

Defeated Sept. 27 was an amendment by Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.) to exempt from taxes the first $1,500 of retirement, annuity or pension paid to retired government employees. It lost on an 18-70 roll call.

On a standing vote, the Senate refused to accept a proposal by Zales N. Ecton (R Mont.) to allow an income tax deduction for medical expenses.

In his first effort to gain acceptance of the Senate Crime Investigating Committee recommendations, Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) was defeated, 29-49. He proposed to eliminate the 10 per cent excise tax on gambling activities and substitute in one package the tax proposals drafted by the Crime Committee.

Before final passage Sept. 28, Senate action on numerous amendments included:

Rejected, 26-53, an amendment by Douglas to increase the capital gains tax from 25 per cent to 28 per cent.

Defeated, 15 - 62, an attempt by Humphrey to revise the individual income bracket to eliminate the benefits derived from income splitting.

Defeated by voice votes a series of amendments by Kefauver to incorporate the tax recommendations of the Senate Crime Investigating Committee.

Rejected, 9-71, an amendment by Humphrey to reduce certain depletion allowances.

Accepted by voice vote an amendment by Jenner to bar denial of social security funds to states allowing public inspection of such funds.

Accepted, 52-22, an amendment by Blair Moody (D Mich.) to eliminate excise tax on washing machines and vacuum cleaners.

The Senate completed action on the bill at a long Sept. 28 session after reaching an agreement late Sept. 27 to limit debate. In all, the Senate disposed of more than 60 proposed amendments, agreeing to or rejecting nearly 40 of them on Sept. 28.

After defeating repeated efforts to increase the tax yield, the Senate Sept. 28 passed on a 57-19 roll call, the Revenue Act of 1951. Democrats voted for the bill, 38-5. Republicans favored it, 19-14. (For voting, see chart, p. 535.)

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) (Modified by Eugene D. Millikin (R Colo.) —Provide for mutual savings banks and building and loan associations a minimum of 15 per cent of income to be set aside tax-free for reserves or a larger percentage set aside as long as total reserves, surplus and undivided profits do not exceed 10 per cent of total deposits. Ecton — Extend date in which release of life interest or life estate can be made from Jan. 1, 1951 to enactment date of Revenue Act of 1951. Voice.

Conference

Senate members were appointed to a joint House-Senate conference to reconcile differences in the two bills. In the group, which began meeting Oct. 3, were Sens. Walter F. George, (D Ga.) Tom Connally (D Tex.), Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.), Eugene D. Millikin (R Colo.), and Robert A. Taft (R Ohio); and Reps. Robert L. Doughton (D N.C.), Jere Cooper (D Tenn.), John D. Dingell (D Mich.), Wilbur Mills (D Ark.), Daniel A. Reed (R N.Y.), Thomas A. Jenkins (R Ohio) and Richard M. Simpson (R Pa.).

After a series of closed meetings, the conference group agreed on a bill to increase taxes $5.75 billion. The conference bill, in general, followed more closely provisions of the Senate-passed bill than it did the the House-approved version. (See Provisions, p. 409.)

HOUSE REJECTS BILL

An unusual combine of Republicans and Administration Democrats Oct. 16 blocked House approval of the conference version.

In debate, the two groups cited difference reasons for their opposition. The Republicans said their votes were a protest against Administration spending. Reed, spokesman for the group, said there should be no tax increase until the Administration reduced expenditures. He called the measure "excessive taxation without justification." He added that it would promote inflation, increase prices, reduce incentive and impose an unfair burden on the lower-income groups.

Some of the Democrats described their opposition as a protest against what they called an unfair and inadequate bill. Most said they wanted a measure that would yield more revenue through higher tax rates on the upper-income brackets and corporations.

Stating that the bill had been "butchered" in conference, Herman P. Eberharter (D Pa.) said, "I do not object quite so much to butchering if everybody gets a fair cut of the hog. But when a favored few get all the ham and pork chops, and the rest of the people get just plain old sow belly, at least the people are entitled to know what they are swallowing."

John A. Blatnik (D Minn.) said the bill "soaks the common people but permits the corporations to escape their fair share of taxes."

Objections were raised against the Jenner amendment which barred denial of federal aid to states allowing public inspection of social security funds.

Recommittal Loses

Reed moved to send the bill back to conference. His motion lost on voice vote.

Then, on what was expected to be a routine vote to approve the bill, the surprise combine of Republicans and Democrats voted the measure down, 157-204, on roll-call vote. Opposing the bill were 139 Republicans and 65 Democrats. Supporting it were 122 Democrats and 34 Republicans.

Doughton then moved to ask the Senate for a new conference to rework the rejected bill. His motion carried on voice vote. The Senate agreed Oct. 17 on voice vote to call a new conference.

Second Conference

The second conference (the committee members were the same) made a few minor changes in the bill Oct. 17. The estimated revenue yield was reduced to $5.691 billion. The changes were:

Individual income taxes: Provide for increase of 11 per cent rather than 11.5 per cent on first $2,000 of income after deductions and personal exemptions. (In all other brackets the increase was still 11.75 per cent of existing tax liability or nine per cent after taxes.)

Capital gains: Increase maximum rate on long-term capital gains for individuals and corporations from 25 per cent to 26 per cent. Effective Jan. 1, 1952.

Corporation Income (Excess Profits): Change effective date of the cutback of the average earnings credit under the excess-profits tax (85 per cent to 83 per cent) from Jan. 1, 1952, to July 1, 1951.

Excise taxes: Exempt children's ice and roller skates from 15 per cent excise tax. Levy 10 per cent excise tax on electric garbage disposal units.

Mutuals, cooperatives: Exempt rural electrification cooperatives and certain mutual insurance companies from a provision requiring informational tax returns on patronage dividends and other such distributions.

Coal, timber: End holding period for coal mining when coal is actually mined but end holding period for timber when lease was entered into. (Existing law ended holding period for coal and timber when lease was entered into; first conference report ended period when coal was mined or timber cut.)

Coal royalties: Provide for ordinary income tax treatment of royalties rather than capital gains treatment in assessing penalty taxes for excesive accumulations by personal holding companies.

Employee payments: Provide that section granting capital gains treatment to lump-sum payments received at retirement upon the release of rights to future profits of the employer be restricted to cases where the employee was entitled to such profits either for the duration of his life or for at least five years after retirement.

Loss carryovers: Provide that section allowing three-year carry-over for net operating losses for years 1948 and 1949 be changed to include 1947 for new companies (those formed after Jan. 1, 1946).

Final Action

The revised version sped through the Senate without debate Oct. 18. Passage, by voice vote, came after a brief explanation of the changes by George.

A move by Langer for a roll-call vote was unsuccessful. Both Langer and Dirksen announced their opposition to the bill.

Administration leaders in the House were able to round up enough Democratic votes to insure acceptance of the second conference report Oct. 19. Of the 65 Democrats who voted against the report Oct. 16, 25 switched their votes to favor the Oct. 19 report. Republican opposition, however, waivered only slightly. Three Republicans switched their votes.

The vote was 185-160, with 147 Democrats, 37 Republicans and one independent voting for passage. Opposed were 34 Democrats and 126 Republicans. This completed Congressional action.

Tax Bill Signed

President Truman signed the $5.691 billion tax bill Oct. 20 but criticized the measure as inadequate and unfair.

Mr. Truman said he signed the bill "because we badly need these revenues to help pay for the strong defenses we are building." However he added that the measure would not yield enough revenue to maintain a pay-as-we-go defense program.

The President attacked what he called "unfortunate features" of the bill and served notice that he would urge Congress to close loopholes in the bill in 1952. He criticized certain capital gains provisions, family partnerships, depletion allowances on certain minerals and the Jenner amendment. The latter barred denial of federal social security aid to states that permitted inspection of relief funds.

Group Stands

Summary — The Administration's 1951 tax revision program won the support of most organizations on one point or another while evoking attacks from these same organizations on other points.

Of course, one organization's meat frequently was another's poison. Or in tax terms, each of the many contending economic interest groups in the nation felt that others enjoyed unfair "loopholes" and were not being taxed equitably or enough.

Business groups tended to favor heavier emphasis than did the Administration on increases bearing more on lower - income groups and to resist Administration ideas on closing "loopholes" of advantage to their industries. And they sought to substitute general, uniform - rate sales taxes on either the retail or "manufacturer-last processor" level for the existing excise taxes and for the increased excises sought.

Labor groups tended to back "loophole" closing, preferred the House version of income tax-rate increase to that proposed by Secretary of the Treasury John W. Snyder, sided with the Administration generally on corporate taxes when not going beyond Administration proposals, and opposed both Administration excise ideas and business' sales tax plans.

Farm groups split on various tax issues more than did labor or business, with some farm groups lined up similarly to business groups and some to labor groups on various issues.

Pay-As-We-Go

Almost all the organizations which took stands on the overall questions involved in balancing the budget came out in favor of a pay-as-we-go policy, and most also used the tax measure as an opportunity to advocate cutting the expenditures budget.

Organizations favoring both policies included: American Bankers Association, American Farm Bureau Federation, American Retail Federation, Chamber of Commerce of the U.S., Council of State Chambers of Commerce, Committee for Constitutional Government, Committee on Federal Tax Policy, National Association of Manufacturers, National Association of Wholesalers, Inc., National Grange, National Retail Dry Goods Association, and Southern States Industrial Council. The Advertising Council and the life insurance industry gave widespread advertising to these ideas.

The American Cotton Manufacturers Institute, American Mining Congress, National Economic Council, National Federation of Independent Business, Inc., and National Small Business Men's Association also favored cutting appropriations. NSBMA opposed voting any new taxes until the budget was adopted and it was determined if existing taxes would yield enough.

Organizations like the American Federation of Labor, Congress of Industrial Organizations, Americans for Democratic Action, and Cooperative League of the U.S.A., Inc., favored a pay-as-we-go plan, but did not see eye to eye with the business groups on possibilities of cutting the federal budget, partly because they supported many programs which presumably would fall under the cutting knife.

Corporate Taxation

The Administration asked that $3 billion of the $10 billion tax increases proposed come from increased corporate taxes — normal, surtax, and excess-profits.

Organizations which spoke up ranged in their stands all the way from those like the Committee for Constitutional Government, which sought out-right repeal of the corporate income and excess-profits taxes, through those which opposed the suggested increases or any corporate increases, to those which backed the Administration plan or went beyond it.

The National Association of Manufacturers wanted to keep the corporate rate unchanged, abolish excess-profits taxation, and add a temporary defense tax. Other organizations opposing an increase in the corporate rate included the Association of American Railroads, Committee on Federal Tax Policy, Council of State Chambers of Commerce, and National Economic Council.

The Chamber of Commerce of the U.S., American Retail Federation, National Retail Dry Goods Association, and American Cotton Manufacturers Institute were willing to see combined corporation income and surtaxes as high as 50 per cent, up three per cent, but balked at Snyder's 55 per cent rate recommendation.

The American Farm Bureau Federation, American Federation of Labor, Americans for Democratic Action, Congress of Industrial Organizations, and National Association of Wholesalers' Inc., went along with the Administration, or, as in the CIO's case, beyond Snyder's suggested rate.

Organizations like the National Federation of Independent Business, Inc., opposed increasing the rate on small business, or, if such an increase were to be made, asked for various deductions.

Excess-Profits Tax

The American Labor Party of New York, ADA, CIO (which went beyond Snyder's proposal), National Farmers Union and National Grange supported the Administration plan to raise excess - profits tax rates.

The American Bankers Association (which asked for more credits), American Cotton Manufacturers Institute (which suggested waiting for a year), American Farm Bureau Federation, Chamber of Commerce of the U.S.A., Council of State Chambers of Commerce, NAM, and Television Broadcasters Taxation Committee opposed raising the excess-profits tax rates. The TV group also opposed raising the 62 per cent over-all ceiling on corporate taxes to the 70 per cent proposed.

Personal Income Tax

The Administration advocated raising personal income tax rates by four per cent of taxable income.

Generally, the labor groups wanted to exempt lower income groups from the increased rates or soften the effect there while increasing the rates for the wealthy. They fought the idea, mentioned and rejected by Snyder, that the individual $600 exemption be cut to $500.

The AFL proposed a credit for the lowest income group; CIO suggested that the lowest bracket be split for more progression in the rates, and United Electrical Workers (independent) sought increased exemptions and deductions for low-income groups. Also backing exemption of lower-income groups from the increases were the National Farmers Union, National Grange and ADA.

The Committee on Federal Tax Policy agreed with the labor groups that the individual exemption should not be cut to $500, NAM said such a step should be held in reserve, and the American Farm Bureau Federation and National Retail Dry Goods Association backed the cut.

NAM and other business groups favored putting the tax increase into effect by a special tax on the income remaining after present taxes, deductions and exemptions.

Selective Excises

Snyder suggested increases in the excise rates on selected commodities. These taxes would sop up excessive buying power with a resultant anti-inflationary effect and steer buying away from goods containing scarce materials, according to supporters of this approach.

Opposition to this plan came from labor groups which argued that this meant rationing the lower-income groups while those with more money could buy at will. Business opponents of this plan, especially those most affected by current and proposed excises, argued instead for general sales taxation of all commodities except food and medicine, and elimination of all excise taxes except on tobacco and alcoholic beverages.

Some of these groups favored a broad sales tax on the manufacturers or last processors level, on ground this would be easiest to collect. Others said the manufacturers sales tax would lead to pyramiding as each handler would compute his margin on the tax, and urged a retailers sales tax instead. The labor groups opposed both retailers and manufacturers sales taxes, with hardest words for the latter. National Economic Council also opposed a general sales tax.

The American Farm Bureau Federation, National Grange, and National Retail Dry Goods Association were among backers of the selective plan. AFBF specifically opposed the general sales tax.

The manufacturers sales tax was supported by Committee for Constitutional Government, Committee on Federal Taxing Policy, and NAM.

The retail-level general sales tax was backed by the American Retail Federation, National Committee for Fair Emergency Excise Taxation, Southern States Industrial Council, Jewelry Industry Tax Committee, Gas Appliance Manufacturers Association, National Electrical Manufacturers Association, National Association of Electrical Distributors, National Association of Photographic Manufacturers, Inc., Institute of Cooking and Heating Appliance Manufacturers and, if a general sales tax were decided upon, by NRDGA.

The Chamber of Commerce of the U.S. said either level would be acceptable. The Council of State Chambers of Commerce announced itself as split, with most of its state chambers backing the manufacturers level as the place to collect the tax. Independent Investors, Inc., backed the general idea without specifying the level.

On Specific Excise Hikes

While the battle was waged partly over general as opposed to specific excise taxation, many groups which make, sell or use commodities singled out by the federal revenue department spoke up in opposition to the proposed new or augmented taxes, or asked for reductions in existing taxes. Following are commodities and groups opposing more taxes on them:

New autos: — American Automobile Association, American Taxicab Association, Inc., Automobile Manufacturers Association, and National Automobile Dealers Association. The manufacturers group favored instead a broad tax program limited to the emergency. (American Farm Bureau Federation approved boosting the new-car tax but not that on replacement parts.)

Gasoline: AAA, AFBF, the taxi group, Air Transport Association of America, American Transit Association, American Trucking Associations, Inc., National Association of Motor Bus Operators, and National Grange.

Trailercoaches: Trailercoach Dealers National Association and Trailer Coach Manufacturers Association (opposed boosts; sought repeal).

Radio, television sets: National Association of Broadcasters, National Appliance and Radio Dealers Association, National Television Dealers' Association, and Radio - Television Manufacturers Association. The latter group also asked elimination of the tax on sets sold to the federal government or to be used for military, industrial and similar purposes.

Food freezers: Refrigeration Equipment Manufacturers Association, Utah Poultry and Farmers Cooperative, and National Committee for Farm Production Supplies (composed of National Council of Farmer Cooperatives and other groups).

Other hard goods — American Home Laundry Manufacturers Association (home washers, etc.), Vacuum Cleaners Manufacturers' Association (vacuum cleaners), Clock Manufacturers Association of America (clocks and watches), National Association of Food Equipment Manufacturers (commercial cooking equipment using gas, electricity or oil is taxed, but steam cookers are not, NAFEM said, and asked that all or no production tools be taxed).

Other Items

Other consumer-durables industries protested excises or excise increases on phonographs, sewing machines, silver - plated eating utensils, and watches.

The Athletic Goods Manufacturers Association and Sporting Goods Association asked that excises on children's sport goods be eliminated while keeping in effect the taxes on other sporting goods. National Authority for the Ladies' Handbag Industry asked a cut in the present 20 per cent tax on ladies' purses. The Treasury proposal to extend the 20 per cent tax to certain shampoos brought opposition from the National Association of Retail Druggists, National Beauty and Barber Manufacturers' Association, and the Toilet Goods Association.

The Edison Electric Institute asked that public power systems be taxed like private systems. National Association of Railroad and Utility Commisioners of the U.S. asked that any additional tax on utilities be in excise form and be applied equally to public and private systems. American Farm Bureau Federation backed a three and one-third per cent electrical-energy tax to be levied on both privately and publicly owned systems. American Public Power Association opposed such a plan.

The National Bowling Council and the American Bowling Congress opposed the Treasury idea of a 20 per cent tax on use of bowling alleys, billiard and pool tables. National Ballroom Operators Association wanted ballrooms exempted from the cabaret tax. Symphony orchestra groups and the National Association of Concert Managers asked elimination or reduction of the admissions tax as applied to concerts. The League of New York Theatres asked that admissions to free radio and TV broadcasts be taxed.

Alcohol, Tobacco

In most of the lobbying on excise taxation, the fight over tax rates on alcoholic beverages and tobacco products was waged separately from that on other excises.

However, some labor advocates of cutting excises or at least not raising them asked for equal treatment for common-consumption goods and included cigarettes and beer in that category. Other groups, like NAM and the Committee on Federal Tax Policy, also opposed raising liquor and tobacco excises, feeling the limit had been reached.

The following groups opposed Treasury proposals for excise tax increases on alcoholic beverages. Some opposed increases on all types of such drinks; others opposed increases on the specific type they handle (wine, beer or liquor):

General — National Alcoholic Beverage Control Association, National Association of Alcoholic Beverage Importers, Inc., National Licensed Beverage Association, National Retail Liquor Package Store Association, the Hotel and Restaurant Employees and Bartenders International Union (AFL); the Distillery, Rectifying and Wine Workers International Union of America (AFL), and International Union of United Brewery, Flour, Cereal, Soft Drink and Distillery Workers of America (CIO).

Wine — Wine Conference of America, Wine Institute of California, California Grape Growers Council, National Grape Cooperative Association, Inc., and Association of New York State Canners. The American Farm Bureau Federation would agree to some increase in wine taxes, but argued that the Treasury-proposed increase was too much.

Beer — U. S. Brewers Foundation, Small Brewers Assocation, and, National Beer Wholesalers Association of America.

Liquor — Distilled Spirits Institute, and, Wine and Spirits Wholesalers of America.

In addition, relief from problems arising under the alcoholic beverage tax program was asked by the Ethanol Committee (drugs containing ethyl alcohol), Flavoring Extract Manufacturers Association of the U.S., National Association of Retail Druggists, National Fruit and Syrup Manufacturers Association, and National Manufacturers of Soda Water Flavors.

Tobacco Tax Foes

Among organizations opposing the Treasury - backed boosts for excise taxes on tobacco products were state Farm Bureau Federations and Granges from the Carolinas, Kentucky and Virginia; tobacco growers cooperatives from Kentucky, Tennessee and Virginia; the Bright Belt Warehouse Association, Inc., and the Burley Auction Warehouse Association.

Also, the National Tobacco Tax Research Council (all elements including cigarette manufacturers); Cigar Manufacturers Association of America, and Cigar Manufacturers Association of Tampa; National Association of Tobacco Distributors, National Association of Wholesalers, Inc., and Retail Tobacco Dealers of America.

Capital Gains

The Administration sought an increase from 25 per cent to 37.5 per cent in the capital gains tax rate, and also the requirement that to be eligible for taxation under this provision the property must be held for at least a year, instead of the existing six-months period.

Support for this came from the AFL, CIO (which went beyond Secretary Snyder and asked for a 50 per cent rate), Cooperative League of the U.S.A., National Grange, Americans for Democratic Action, and, to some extent, American Farm Bureau Federation. The Farm Bureau backed the longer period, but also spoke up for legislation if need be to get capital gains recognition for sale of breeding livestock. The AFL and CIO also asked that the capital gains tax be applicable at the death of the owner.

Opposition to the proposals — coupled in most cases with suggestions that the rates be lowered and the holding period shortened — came from: American Cotton Manufacturers Institute, American Cotton Shippers Association, American Mining Congress, Chamber of Commerce of the U.S., Committee on Federal Tax Policy, Independent Investors, Investment Counsel Association of America (against the rate increase but took no stand on the holding period), and various stock and commodity exchanges.

National Association of Real Estate Boards and the CIO were among those favoring exempting home-owners from the capital gains tax to the extent that they profit by sale of their own home and then apply the profit to purchase of another home.

The National Council of Coal Lessors, Inc., wanted capital gains rather than income treatment for the gains from sale of coal paid for by the ton as mined. The Council of State Chambers of Commerce opposed taxing as capital gain the gains from sale of business property, and asked that losses be recognized to the extent gains are taxed.

Estate, Gift Taxes

President Truman asked for amendment of the estate and gift taxes to close what he called "broad loopholes."

Such legislation was backed by the AFL, American Labor Party, ADA, CIO, Cooperative League of the U.S.A., National Grange, and United Electrical Workers.

Opponents included the American Farm Bureau Federation, Chamber of Commerce of the U.S., and Council of State Chambers of Commerce.

Split-Income

Secretary Snyder suggested that Congress consider the effects of the 1948 provision permitting universal income - splitting between husband and wife for tax-computing purposes. Declaring that the provision would cause single persons to pay more under proposed income-tax rates than they paid during World War II, while married couples in middle-income brackets would pay less, he said that Treasury and Congressional committee staffs were considering changing the provision.

Among groups which backed the idea of eliminating or reducing the provision were the AFL, American Labor Party, Americans for Democratic Action, CIO, International Union of Electrical Workers (CIO), National Grange, and United Electrical Workers (independent).

Among opponents of changing the provision were the Committee on Federal Tax Policy and the Council of State Chambers of Commerce.

State, Local Bonds

One Treasury suggestion which elicited incidental support from a number of organizations also brought protests from dozens of state and local officials and their organizations. This was the suggestion that interest from securities issued in the future by state and local governments, and their agencies, be taxed by the federal government.

The American Farm Bureau Federation, National Grange, CIO, Commerce and Industry Association of New York, National Retail Dry Goods Association, Cooperative League of the U.S.A., and Americans for Democratic Action backed the plan.

But the Conference on State Defense, National Association of Housing Officials, American Public Power Association, National Association of County Officials, and many state and local legislative bodies and officials protested on constitutional grounds and because they said the plan would double the cost of floating their bonds while yielding the federal government very little revenue. Groups in the Conference on State Defense are the American Municipal Association, Municipal Finance Officers Association of the U.S. and Canada, National Association of Attorneys General, National Institute of Municipal Law Officers, and U.S. Conference of Mayors.

Withholding

Treasury proposals for requiring the withholding for tax purposes of part of the dividends, interest and royalty payments made by firms—as wages are now withheld by employers — brought mixed reactions.

The AFL, ADA, CIO and United Electrical Workers liked the idea. National Retail Dry Goods Association and American Cotton Manufacturers Institute approved it for dividends, but ACMI opposed it as applied to interest payments.

American Farm Bureau Federation and the Federation of Women Shareholders in American Business, Inc., opposed withholding on dividends (the latter group asked instead that stock options to corporate officials be taxed). American Bankers Association, and various state bankers associations, opposed withholding on interest.

The Chamber of Commerce of the U.S., the Council of State Chambers of Commerce, and the National Economic Council opposed withholding on either dividends or interest.

Various petroleum and other groups objected to withholding on royalties.

The Association of American Railroads asked that the plan be deferred.

Co-op Taxation

The fight over proposed changes in tax status of cooperative and mutual organizations was a thoroughly confused one in 1951.

It was confused partly because the Treasury Department made several suggestions, some of which were in the direction of rendering the co-ops more taxable, while the Department of Agriculture opposed such changes and the President issued statements which were interpreted by co-op supporters as opposing the changes.

It was confused also because farm organizations, the stoutest champions of the co-ops, reportedly differed among themselves as to whether they should support a proposed change which would tax the co-op on unallocated earnings. At the hearings, the farm spokesmen differed and those for at least one organization did not take a clear-cut stand on that issue.

While most of the thunder came out of the fight on the tax status of farm marketing and purchasing co-ops, the city consumer co-ops, mutual banks and insurance firms and savings and loan leagues were also seeking to avert changes in their tax status while private for-profit groups sought to end their so-called federal income tax-free status.

For Taxing

The following organizations were among those which, under the leadership of the National Tax Equality Association and National Associated Businessmen, sought to have co-ops and mutuals pay taxes on their income:

Chamber of Commerce of the U.S., Consumer Bankers Association (Morris Plan banks), Committee on Federal Tax Policy, Council of State Chambers of Commerce, Grain and Feed Dealers National Association, Independent Livestock Marketing Association, Investors League, Inc., National Association of Wholesalers, Inc., National Federation of Independent Business, National Retail Dry Goods Association, Southern States Industrial Council, and U.S. Wholesale Grocers' Association.

State groups on this side of the issue included the North Carolina Oil Jobbers Association (if the co-ops processed or sold non - agricultural goods), North Carolina Association of Insurance Agents (speaking for 23 other state insurance agents associations as well), Illinois Bankers Association (and nine other state bankers associations), and the Pennsylvania Petroleum Association.

Spokesmen for the American Farm Bureau Federation, Cooperative League, and National Grange were willing to concede that those earnings of a co-op which were neither distributed to the patrons in cash nor credited to the patrons on the organization's books could be taxed.

They, in company with the other backers of the co-op idea, fought against taxing the co-op for the difference between the co-op's income and its expense if that difference were given to the co-op patrons or credited to them.

Oppose Change

The CIO, Missouri Farmers Union, National Farmers Union, National Federation of Grain Co-operatives, and National Milk Producers Federation opposed any change in the co-op tax status. In fact, the Missouri group asked for additional exemption beyond that allowed to certain farm co-ops.

The National Council of Farmer Cooperatives attitude was variously reported by others at the hearings on the tax bill. The NCFC spokesmen, however, took no definite stand on the unallocated reserves issue.

NCFC, the Co-op League, the Milk Producers, and co-op leaders meeting in sessions of the American Institute of Cooperation (a study organization), joined in condemning a Senate Finance Committee proposal. The plan criticized was to add restrictions to existing ones on eligibility for co-op federal income tax exemption and make patronage refunds taxable against the co-ops except if paid in cash or in short-term interest-bearing notes. Big co-ops would lose their exemptions.

The National Farmers Union, bitterly opposed to the Senate Finance Committee decision, released a letter from President Truman referring to his party's campaign pledges and hoping that tax legislation as passed would be helpful to co-ops. The President's message did not directly comment on the Senate unit's plan. Secretary of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan attacked the Senate plan, which resembled a Treasury proposal, and called it an NTEA victory.

The CIO's opposition to change in the co-op tax status extended to changes in tax status of related earnings of other non-profit organizations. Other opponents of such changes with respect to their fields were: American Mutual Alliance (mutual fire insurance firms), National Association of Mutual Insurance Agents, Cooperative Food Distributors of America (private for-profit grocery retailers who own non-profit wholesale firms), Credit Union National Association, National Association of Mutual Savings Banks, National Savings and Loan League, and U.S. Savings and Loan League.

Depletion Allowances

The President's tax program included proposals to cut down on the so-called percentage depletion "loopholes" — allowance of deduction of a fixed percentage of gross income to cover depletion of underground mineral reserves with consequent tax-liability reduction.

In this he was backed in 1951 by such organizations as the American Farm Bureau Federation, National Farmers Union and National Grange; Co-operative League of the U.S.A. (members of which own oil wells); AFL, ADA, UE, and CIO (the latter asked for complete elimination).

But he was opposed on this score by the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S., American Mining Congress, and many minerals industry associations in those industries which have such allowances. In addition, a number of groups either asked for increases in the allowances their product enjoyed, or for allowances for mineral resources not under the provision already.

Oppose Depletion Cut

Among oil groups opposing decrease: American Petroleum Institute, American Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors, Greater Arizona, Inc. (state chamber of commerce), Independent Oil Producers and Landowners Association Tri-State (Indiana-Illinois-Kentucky), Independent Petroleum Association of America, Independent Natural Gas Association of America; and, Kansas Independent Oil and Gas Association.

Also, National Petroleum Association, National Stripper Well Association, New Mexico Oil and Gas Association, New York State Oil Producers Association, Ohio Oil and Gas Association, Pennsylvania - Grade Crude-Oil Association, Rocky Mountain Oil and Gas Association, Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association, Texas State Board of Education (a state agency), Western Oil and Gas Association, and Western Petroleum Refiners Association.

Firms in the ball-clay, phosphate rock, potash, sulphur and vermiculite mining industries were among those that also opposed cuts in depletion allowances.

For More Allowances

The National Coal Association sought an increase in the coal allowance from five to 10 per cent. American Mining Congress sought increases generally. Lake Superior Iron Ore Association asked recognition of development costs and discovery as operating expense.

The National Sand and Gravel Association, National Lime Association (metallurgical and chemical grade limestone), National Crushed Stone Association, and Agricultural Limestone Institute, and firms which mine asbestos fiber, diatomaceous earth, fuller's earth, perlite and slate were among those which asked for inclusion of their products among those eligible for 15 per cent depletion.

LATE PRESSURES

Each step in the progress of the tax bill toward enactment unleashed new or renewed pressures and produced shifts in emphasis in organization stands.

Business groups' statements reflected more backing for the Senate Finance Committee bill's corporate and individual income tax provisions than for the House-passed version, but some business groups wanted no tax revision at all. Labor groups looked toward the House bill, to the extent that it accorded with their previous recommendations, but sought to go beyond where it didn't.

In almost identical language, labor and farmers union chiefs and publications referred to various versions of the Senate Finance Committee bill as a "soak-the-poor" measure.

AFL's president, William Green, used the term when the upper chamber's tax unit was thinking of increasing the income-tax rate on each bracket three per cent instead of the House bill's 12.5 per cent increase in tax liability. After the Senate version was made somewhat similar to the House on that point, Matthew Woll, AFL vice president in charge of taxation, hit at the Senators for departing from the House bill in other respects. He criticized the Senate unit for failing to recommend as much revenue-raising as the House had voted, the income-splitting provision, the cut in corporate taxes, and the excise tax rate increases. The AFL convention, held in San Francisco, asked concentration of personal income-tax boosts in the $5,000-and-up brackets.

The CIO said the Senate bill would force workers "further under water, economically" while it "widens old and creates new tax loopholes for protecting the luxury standards of those who have more income than they need . . . to compensate for these losses of tax revenue from those best able to pay by imposing heavier income taxes on those least able to pay . . ."

CIO's Requests

The CIO in a Sept. 20 letter, signed by Nathan E. Cowan, director of the legislative department, asked Senators to knock out the $1.3 billion excise tax increases, the increases on incomes of less than $4,000, the split-income "loophole", and the alternative method proposed by the Senate of computing individual income tax increases. It also wanted to retain the House excess-profits and corporate tax provisions and to levy a withholding tax on dividends and interest.

National Farmers Union's publication, "National Union Farmer," September issue, headlined "Senate's Bill Hits Heaviest on the Poor."

Discard Tax Change?

Meanwhile, business groups called for discarding all tax-raising legislation. The Ohio Chamber of Commerce announced Sept. 15 that it had been joined by business groups and 32 other state Chambers of Commerce in such an appeal. The Ohio Chamber said that any increase in federal income and corporate taxes was "unnecessary, dangerous, and an incentive at Washington for further excessive and unlimited spending."

The Ohio Chamber said that federal cash expenditures and receipts for the fiscal year 1951-52 would be reasonably in balance without the new taxes.

The Chamber of Commerce of the U.S. had urged Congress to go slow on imposing further taxes, and the National Small Business Men's Association even earlier had taken a stand similar to the Ohio Chamber's.

The Tax Foundation publication, received regularly by Congressmen, carried an article, based on a "Minneapolis Star" editorial, which argued that the House bill, if passed, would stimulate inflation. This would be so, the article argued, because the bulk of the purchasing power was in the hands of the lower income groups because there were more people there, and lower income take-home pay would be decreased very little percentage-wise.

Economic Report

Summary — In a "unanimous" report notable for the dissenting comments of various of its 14 members, the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report in 1951 recommended to the nation: Pay-as-we-go financing of the defense program, increased taxes, government economy and a careful screening of non-defense spending.

The report of the Senate-House group, one of several it issued during the year, was made under its statutory responsibility of studying the President's annual Economic Report and making a report of its own.

The President delivered his economic message to Congress Jan. 12. The legislative requests contained in it were considered by Congress when it extended the Defense Production Act. (See page 438).

The message itself was the general subject of the Joint Committee's hearings, at which government officials and leading economists testified. The Committee published its conclusions April 2.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

In his annual Economic Report required under terms of the Employment Act of 1946, President Truman laid the blame for what he called America's "enormously greater economic problems" and new burdens at the door of "Soviet communism."

While he proclaimed "we invite disaster if we underestimate the forces working against us," the President added that ". . .the resources are on our side."

He spelled out the "nature of our defense effort" as a job with three parts — rapid increase in armed strength, expansion of American capacity for producing military supplies, and maintenance of "our basic economic strength."

Government economic policies in the next year, he told the Congressmen, called for continuation of the production control program, increased taxes, extension of rent control, the training of more new workers for the labor force, expanded defense housing, increased local public health services, continued military and economic aid to free nations with emphasis on protection of strategic materials, and continuation of government export controls.

Mr. Truman also requested:

Renewal of priorities and allocations power, as well as the loan program provided under the Defense Production Act for expansion of productive capacity and supplies.

Direct government construction of industrial facilities.

Construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project to provide additional electric power.

Major emphasis on training and recruitment of unmarried women and married women without young children.

Unemployment insurance improvements.

HEARINGS

The Joint Committee Jan. 24 began its hearings on economic problems related to the Presidential message. Price Stabilization Director Michael V. DiSalle told the Committee that he recently had recommended a general price freeze and that a rollback was being considered. DiSalle said he had just handed his freeze recommendation to Eric A. Johnston, sworn in Jan. 24 as Administrator of the Economic Stabilization Agency.

Cyrus S. Ching, chairman of the Wage Stabilization Board, preceded DiSalle on the witness stand. He said it would be difficult if not impossible to administer wage controls on a commodity or industry basis. To be fair, said Ching, controls must affect all wage and salaried employees. He said also the Board was readying a wage policy recommendation that would allow "quite a bit of flexibility for collective bargaining."

On Jan. 25, Marriner S. Eccles, then a Federal Reserve Board member, urged adoption of a 44-hour week, "without overtime pay," a general wage freeze and selected price controls as anti-inflation measures.

Price controls, he said, were "unnecessary" and could not be successfully applied "unless simultaneously accompanied by allocation and rationing." Nevertheless, he said he thought they should be applied where materials were both essential and scarce, and wage and salary ceilings should be put into effect promptly.

Price, Wage Curbs Ordered

A few hours before price and wage controls were ordered by the Economic Stabilization Agency Jan. 26, Johnston, then the ESA's chief, told the Committee that the curbs would be "temporary" if the public cooperated and steps were taken to halt inflation at the roots.

He listed the following as necessary: Balanced budget, restored confidence in the buying power of the dollar, and credit curbs.

Another witness Jan. 26 was Charles E. Wilson, Defense Mobilization Director, who said special attention was being given to the problems of small business. He opposed establishment of a special government corporaton to assist in getting defense contracts for small plants. Wilson endorsed the President's proposal to build government defense plants where necessary to obtain production otherwise unavailable.

At a panel discussion Jan. 29 on "the nature of the inflation problem," the Committee heard Leon Keyserling, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, endorse the wage-price freeze as "desirable."

Dr. Edwin G. Nourse, the Council's former chairman, predicted that prices would continue their climb despite the government's freeze order. More effective than wage-price controls, he said, would be tighter curbs on credit and materials, stiffer taxes and determined cutting of unnecessary federal spending. Roy A. Foulke, a vice president of Dun & Bradstreet, said that price freezing attacked the symptoms but not the basic causes of inflation. Martin Gainsbrugh, an economist with the National Industrial Conference Board, also warned there was likelihood of further advances in the price index, despite controls.

Stanley Ruttenberg, the CIO's director of research, said he was not much impressed with the argument that consumer income should be reduced to equalize it with the supply of goods. He pointed out that corporate profits in 1950 ran to about $48 billion before taxes — "a tremendous increase."

The Committee concluded its study Feb. 2. Among witnesses then were three former OPA officials, J. Kenneth Galbraith, Harvard University, Richard E. Heflebower, Northwestern University; and Harold B. Rowe, Brookings Institution. They agreed that existing controls would not be able to hold the line on rising prices.

Another panel group discussed monetary, credit, and debt management problems. Among those taking part were Howard Bowen, University of Illinois; Water E. Spahr, New York University; Lawrence Seltzer, Wayne University; and Wesley Lindow, Irving Trust Co., New York.

REPORTS

On President's Speech

Two months later the Senate-House group came forth with its review and comment on the President's economic message. The April 2 report purportedly bore unanimous endorsement, but there were important "qualifying" footnotes that diminished the area of agreement.

Five Democratic legislators took vigorous exception — via the footnote technique — to at least seven conclusions in the Committee's report and four Republicans made it clear, in supplementary statements, that they concurred in the report only because they detected "a marked shift in position and emphasis by the majority as compared with their previous reports."

Appended was a brief statement by Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.), chairman of the 14-man Committee, who commended the "cooperative spirit" in which the report had been prepared, but flatly denied the Republicans' allegations that there had been any Democratic "shift."

Areas of Agreement

Nevertheless, numerous conclusions were outlined in the report without objecting footnotes. The committee said:

Defense must be financed on a pay-as-we-go basis — "deficit spending cannot be contemplated even for the current defense program."

Early tax increases should be enacted to curb current excess consumer demand and excess business buying.

Government economy was a paramount need.

The general level of federal aid programs to states in fiscal 1952 should be reduced after "careful scrutiny."

Permanent appropriations stemming from legislation enacted "for purposes of recovering from a depression" and other "existing laws might have to be altered or repealed if major economies were to be effected in non-defense spending."

A minimum waiting period of three to six months "might be established before automatic adjustments are allowed to take place, such as that between increases in the cost of living and wage rates, thereby bringing somewhat greater stability and less frequency of change into the price-wage-cost picture."

Disagreements

Disagreements provoked by the report were based on these conclusions:

"Congress short of all-out war should make no military appropriations unless and until adequate federal tax revenues are definitely in sight . . .the defense garment should be cut to the revenue cloth." To this, Sens. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) and William Benton (D Conn.) and Rep. Richard Bolling (D Mo.) objected. They said, instead, "the revenue garment should be cut to fit the defense cloth."

"The maximum scope of federal spending (should be) agreed upon" to limit the burden of taxation — "it is hoped" that total defense expenditures could be held to 20 per cent of the national income and the balance of civilian costs to eight per cent. Douglas, Benton and Bolling said they opposed the establishment of a military "maximum" because "we may need more."

Suspension of cost-of-living escalator clauses in labor contracts were favored by the majority, on grounds that the clauses boost prices. Douglas, Benton and Rep. Edward J. Hart (D N.J.) said wage increases derived from such clauses were the result, not the cause, of higher prices.

The majority said the St. Lawrence Seaway was of questionable value at present. Sen. John Sparkman (D Ala.), Douglas, Benton and Bolling said it was a military necessity.

Disagree on Rent Control

Initiation of stronger rent controls, the report stated, should be left in the hands of State and local governments. Benton and Hart demanded a strong rent control law from Congress.

Delay in federal aid to states for public health services, medical education and secondary schools was urged by the majority, which called on the states to shoulder the burden in the mobilization emergency. Sparkman, Douglas, Benton and Bolling said a delay of such federal programs for the contemplated 10-to-20 year emergency would cause irreparable damage to national health and educational levels.

Postponement of any improvement in unemployment insurance protection for workers who take defense jobs in other states, as recommended in the report, was opposed in a footnote by Douglas, Benton, Hart and Bolling.

The Committee majority was twitted in a suplementary statement by Sen. Arthur V. Watkins (R Utah), and Reps. Jesse P. Wolcott (R Mich.) and Christian A. Herter (R Mass.) "In accord with the positions consistently taken in previous minority reports, we. . .join in the specific recommendations of this report. . .(though) we find many statements, conclusions and implications to which we cannot subscribe."

Other Reports

In line with its "continuing study of matters relating to the economic report," the Joint Committee issued several other reports.

In a farm income study released Feb. 17, the group delcared that nearly 2,500,000 more people could be added to the nation's labor supply if waste of manpower were eliminated and farm living conditions were improved on low-income farms and in rural areas.

The report suggested more adequate credit facilities and expanded technical assistance to small farmers and residents of rural areas, farming on larger units, aid to families seeking other employment, development of new industry and better educational facilities in these areas.

The report disclosed that two million out of nearly six million farm-operator families were producing less than $1,800 a year in farm products.

Inflation Study

The Committee's staff reported Feb. 27 its conclusion that a cash surplus in the federal treasury, "something better" than a "pay-as-we-go" defense economy, was required "at the very least" if price and wage controls were to work, and inflation diminish.

The dominant cause of the price rise from June, 1950, to February, 1951, was laid to "warranted expectations and unwarranted fears of what the government might do."

The report concluded that a more-than-balanced budget could not be achieved "unless we. . .tax heavily, increase production per man hour, increase savings, contract credit, control the money supply and effectively enforce direct controls over wages, prices, materials and manpower."

Other reports of the Joint Committee covered industrial dispersal, price cutting, inflation hazards and low-income living standards.

Defense Production Act Amendments Of 1951

Summary — The Defense Production Act amendments of 1951 revised and extended for one year the Defense Production Act of 1950. They were designed to insure an adequate flow of goods into the stepped-up defense program with a minimum of hardship on the home front.

The Act, as amended in 1951, provided for a system of priorities and allocation of scarce defense materials and facilities, authorized the President to requisition and condemn property and encourage expansion of defense plants, provided for controls on credit, wages, prices and rents, provided special machinery to settle defense labor disputes.

The bill (S 1717) was approved by the Senate June 28 after several weeks of committee hearings and floor debate. But the 1950 Act was to expire June 30, so Congress approved a stop-gap extension (H J Res 278—see page 461) effective during July. In the meantime, the House took up and amended the Senate's S 1717 and approved it July 20. The houses worked out a compromise, which the Senate agreed to July 27. The House followed suit July 30. The President signed the bill, but not without criticizing some of its provisions, July 31—the day the temporary extension of the 1950 Act expired. It became Public Law 96.

Debate over some of the extension legislation's provisions did not end, however, and Congress soon began considering some changes in it. (See page 462.)

Background — The origins of the Act go back to June 25, 1950, when the North Korean army moved into South Korea. United States armed forces were quickly committed to aid South Korea. On July 19, 1950, President Truman sent a long message to Congress explaining U. S. policy in the Far East and outlining legislation that would be needed to fight the war and to step up the general defense effort. It was the germ of the Defense Production Act.

The President immediately sent identical bills to the House and Senate designed to carry out his recommendations. The House acted first, voting even stronger economic controls than the President had requested. The Senate approved a similar bill and the President accepted the resulting compromise measure. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 624.)

With the 1950 Act due to expire June 30, 1951, the President asked Congress April 26 to extend it for two years, to "strengthen" certain provisions and to add new powers. He told Congress in a special message that:

"The major impact of the military buildup on our economy is still to come. Our planned expansion of defense production will not reach its peak for at least a year — and the inflationary pressures brought on by the defense effort likewise have not reached their peak." (For details of the President's requested bill, see Provisions section.

The Chairman of the House and Senate Banking and Currency Committees introduced bills, drawn up in the Executive Department, to carry out the President's request. The Senate completed action first. But it seemed clear to House leaders that the House would not be able to act on the measure before the old law expired. So a 31-day extension bill was passed by both houses to keep the Act alive while the House hammered out the long-range bill.

Several other committees held hearings on matters relative to the Defense Production Act. Decisions reached by these groups were, in several cases, later incorporated into the bill. (See p. 464.)

PROVISIONS

As finally approved by Congress, the Defense Production Act extension law was a combination of provisions taken from the original House and Senate-approved bills. Here are the provisions of the final act, with their sources indicated. Changes from the old law and the position of the President on each provision also is included.

From Senate Bill:

No new provisions contained only in the Senate-approved version of the bill were retained intact in the final measure. Elements of other Senate provisions, however were kept through compromise action taken by the joint House-Senate Conference Committee which worked out the final version.

From House Bill:

Authorize condemnation of facilities needed for defense after certain safeguards have been observed. (Note: Not in old law; the President requested condemnation authority.)

Authorize the government to buy any material for defense use or resale, observing restrictions on farm commodity resale. (Note: Old law confined resale authorization to raw materials; President requested unlimited resale authority of non-farm items.)

Permit purchase for resale at a loss, for stabilization purposes, of imported farm commodities. (Note: Old law permitted purchase of farm products for resale only if needed for stockpiling or industrial use; the President requested authority to resell imported farm commodities for stabilization purposes.).

Permit government resale of all items at a price not below the item's ceiling price or, in the case of items for which there is no ceiling, at a price not below the current market price or below the Commodity Credit Corporation minimum resale price (in the case of farm products.). (Note: Old law restricted resale prices of farm products only, setting it above the CCC minimum sale price or the current market price, whichever was higher; the President requested unlimited resale also to be extended to imported farm products.)

Authorize limited subsidies to producers of high-cost non-farm materials. (Note: Old law had no subsidy provision; the President requested subsidy power on all high-cost materials.)

Permit the government to borrow $2.1 billion from the Treasury to carry out provisions of the Act. (Note: Old law permitted the government to borrow $600 million and authorized appropriation of another $1.4 billion by Congress; the President asked authority to borrow $600 million and for authorization of unlimited appropriation.)

Add barbers and beauticians to exemptions from price control. (Note: Old law exempted public utilities, professional persons, newspapers, commodity exchange margins, etc.; the President requested no changes.)

Terminate Act June 30, 1952. (Note: Old law terminated June 30, 1951, was extended temporarily through July 31, 1951; the President requested June 30, 1953, termination date.)

Ban price ceilings that deny sellers their customary percentage markups which prevailed May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950. (Note: Old law had no similar limitation on price rollbacks; the President requested no change.)

Permit no ceiling on farm commodities below 90 per cent of the price on May 19, 1951, or below parity price. (Note: Old law banned ceilings below the parity price; the President requested no change.)

Put railroad labor - management disputes arising out of the Act under board independent of the Wage Stabilization Board. (Note: Old law put all such disputes under the WSB; the President requested no change.)

Ban orders by defense agencies which would restrict use of natural gas in states having state control of natural gas. (Note: Old act contained no such provision: the President requested no such provision.)

From Both Bills:

Permit the President to control or re-control residential rents in critical defense housing areas. (Note: Old law had no rent-control authority, but limited rent control existed under Housing and Rent Act of 1947; the President requested authority to set rent controls in any area.)

Permit 20 per cent rent increase over 1947 levels, except in critical areas where rollbacks to pre-Korean levels would be permitted. (Note: Old law permitted no blanket increases; the President requested no increases but asked unlimited authority to roll rents back to pre-Korean levels.)

Direct the President to relax housing credit curbs in critical areas. (Note: Old law had no such provision; the President requested no such provision.)

Permit local governments to keep own rent laws as long as they are effective, and permit local governments to come voluntarily under federal rent control or to decontrol if not in a critical area. (Note: Old law had no such provision; the President requested no such provision.)

Prohibit government-set quotas on quantity of livestock which can be slaughtered by any processor. (Note: Old law permitted quotas; the President asked that they be retained.)

Direct that easier credit terms be set on automobiles, radios, television sets, household appliances, home repairs, etc. (Note: Old law permitted unlimited credit restrictions; the President requested no change.)

Create Small Defense Plants Administration to encourage and assist small business participation in the defense effort. (Note: Old law directed the President to encourage small business to share in defense contracts; the President requested no change.)

Provide for import control of fats and certain oils, peanuts, rice and dairy products. (Note: Old law contained no such provision, but similar authority was contained in the Fats and Oils Import Control Act of 1950, which expired; the President asked for no renewal.)

From The Conference:

Two major provisions of the final bill were written by the joint House-Senate conference group called to iron out differences in the two versions of the measure:

Ban rollbacks on non - farm items to a level below the lower of (a) the price prevailing at the time the freeze is ordered, or (b) the price prevailing Jan. 25, 1951, to Feb. 24, 1951. (Note: First Senate - passed bill contained a provision with similar wording, except that "higher" was used in place of "lower"; the first House-passed bill contained no such provision; the old bill contained no such provision; the President requested no such provision.)

Permit ceilings (1) based upon the highest price between Jan. 1, 1950, and June 24, 1950, if the ceiling reflects increases or decreases in costs occurring subsequent to the date on which such highest price was received and prior to July 26, 1951. (This provision later became known as the Capehart amendment when the President asked that it be repealed. See p. 462.)

Retained From Old Law:

In amending the 1950 Defense Production Act, Congress left many major provisions intact. These carry-over provisions were:

Authorize the President to set priorities and allocate defense materials and facilities.

Set punishment for hoarding at one year imprisonment and $10,000 fine.

Authorize the President to requisition property needed for defense.

Provide for just compensation for requisitioned facilities and for appeal by owners to the courts.

Authorize the President to guarantee loans or make loans for expansion of private facilities needed to fulfill defense contracts.

Direct the President to encourage mining of critical minerals.

Encourage voluntary action by business, agriculture, labor and consumers to stabilize wages and prices.

Authorize the President to freeze prices, commissions, margins, fees, allowances, etc.

Direct the President to freeze wages and salaries in industries or businesses subject to a price freeze.

Ban orders compelling changes in business practices or in use of brand names.

Prohibit rationing of retailers on sales in high-price lines.

Authorize an independent agency to carry out price and wage stabilization.

Provide for appeal to courts in case of unfair ceilings.

Specify that civilian supplies shall be distributed as nearly as possible in fair shares to all businesses along the normal channels of distribution.

Authorize the President to fix credit terms for consumer merchandise. (The new law added certain qualifications.)

Authorize the President to fix credit terms on new housing.

Authorize the President to set up a special board to handle labor disputes growing out of the Act. (The new law provided for special handling of rail labor disputes.)

Direct defense contractors to keep complete records and allow government inspection of the records at any time.

Prohibit all government employees from speculating in farm commodities.

Set up a joint Congressional "watchdog" committee to keep a running check on operation of the Act.

Set penalties for violation of various provisions of the Act.

Permit Congress or the President to terminate the Act at any time.

Permit Congress to terminate any section of the Act at any time.

Dropped In Conference

Several provisions which had been approved by one or both houses were dropped from the bill when the joint conference group worked out the final compromise version. These provisions did not appear in the law as passed.

From Senate Bill (Dropped):

Authorize Congress to appropriate unlimited funds to carry out provisions of the Act. (Old law had limited authorization; the President asked for unlimited authorization; the House's increased authorization adopted.)

Stagger expiration dates, ending price-wage-credit-rent controls and special labor dispute machinery provisions Feb. 20, 1952, and ending priority, allocation, requisition and defense loan authority provisions June 30, 1952. (Note: House provisions adopted; see above.)

Authorize FHA mortgage insurance on home construction in defense areas. (Note: Dropped when House agreed to consider same program in separate bill.)

From House Bill (Dropped):

Permit local governments in critical housing areas to veto imposition of federal rent control.

Ban downpayment minimum of more than 10 per cent on homes costing less than $10,000. (Note: Dropped on agreement to consider same provision in separate bill.)

Limit credit restrictions on used cars.

From Both Bills (Dropped):

Ban downpayment minimum of more than 10 per cent on homes costing less than $12,000 sold to veterans. (Note: Dropped on agreement to consider same provision in separate bill.)

Requests Not Granted

Several major provisions requested by the President were rejected by both houses and do not appear in the final law. These provisions were:

Authorize government construction and operation of defense plants.

Compute parity annually.

Authorize government to license all businesses subject to price controls.

Extend credit control power to old housing.

Authorize the government to fix margins for commodity speculation.

Extend entire Act through June 30, 1953.

SENATE

Hearings

The Senate Banking and Currency Committee started hearings May 7 on the original Defense Production bill (S 1397), introduced April 26 by Chairman Burnet R. Maybank (D S.C.) at the request of the Administration. Before the first witness, Charles E. Wilson, Director of Defense Mobilization, could take the stand, Chairman Maybank announced that he was not sold on two of the major planks in the new bill.

Maybank said he would postpone testimony on commercial property rent control proposals, because the plan needed more study. He also criticized the proposed freeze on farm parity prices as of the start of each crop season. He said he was opposed to any "tampering" with the parity program. Maybank then charged that the recently ordered rollback of beef prices "will definitely not be fair and equitable to the feeder of livestock."

Wilson then took the stand to tell the Committee:

"The greatest scarcities of material and hence the greatest need for controlling the flow and use of these materials, are yet to come. Similarly, the greatest pressures on prices and wages — the most serious threat of inflation — will be felt some months from now."

He added that if a general war does not break out, controls probably could be removed within two years. By then, Wilson said, the nation's economy would be able to support both military and civilian production.

Wilson also asked that the government be permitted to buy any product and sell it at a loss. He explained, "This subsidy authority would provide the means for maintaining production objectives consistent with our efforts to stabilize the cost of agricultural products, particularly meat."

Tobin On Inflation

Secretary of Labor Maurice J. Tobin told the group May 8 that inflation must be checked or wages will be forced up. "The basic forces are still inflationary and will become increasingly so as supplies are curtailed by the stepped-up military program, with heavy consumer demand," he said.

Tobin also supported extension of rent controls, if necessary, to cities which have decontrolled themselves. Sen. John W. Bricker (R Ohio) protested against the federal government "telling any city what's good for it."

Manly Fleischmann, Administrator of the National Production Authority, testified May 8. He listened to several complaints about his agency's action on applications for special tax relief. Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) said applications from large firms were approved with "supersonic speed" while those of small firms "rode on a bicycle."

Maybank criticized the geographical distribution of tax benefits and asked for a state breakdown of those granted. Fleischmann said his agency merely processed the applications, it did not make policy. He agreed that a cutoff date should be fixed on the granting of tax relief.

Edwin T. Gibson, acting Defense Production Administrator, told the Committee May 9 that defense production had barely started.

"The tremendous backlog of orders," he said, "will place increasingly severe strains on our productive resources making it necessary to apply more drastic controls on present production and to continue to press for increased capacity to produce the things we need."

Leon Keyserling, Chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisors, testified May 9 that consumers would have an extra $40 billion to spend in the coming year. He recommended that the money be drained off through higher taxes, wage and price controls and added credit curbs.

Chairman William McChesney Martin, Jr., of the Federal Reserve Board said May 11 that Credit Regulation "W" had stopped inflation caused by installment buying. He asked that the bill include stronger provisions for credit control. Martin said credit curbs should be extended to old houses as well as new construction.

Johnston Lists "Threats"

Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston appeared before the Committee May 11 and 15. He outlined six major inflationary threats:

1. Injection of one billion dollars weekly into the country's economic bloodstream when defense production commenced to roll later in 1951;
2. "Milk-it-dry" profit, price and wage demands.
3. Threat of food price increases, which would bring pressure for further cost-of-living wage increases.
4. Scare-buying and hoarding.
5. The threat to defense production should the "peace" between labor and management end.
6. General unwillingness to accept existence of the national emergency, with jockeying and complacency setting up roadblocks in the way of a team job.

Johnston then went on to summarize a six-point anti-inflation program:

1. A pay-as-we-go tax program.
2. A pay-as-we-go credit policy for everyone.
3. Increased savings.
4. General economy to wipe out non-essential consumption and waste by government, business and individuals.
5. Control of materials to divide them between defense and civilian production.
6. Strengthening of direct controls on prices, rents, credit, etc.

To crack down on chiselers, Johnston asked for authority to license businesses and to withdraw licenses if regulations were flaunted, and to demand unlimited treble damages against price violators.

DiSalle Says Bill Vital

Price Stabilizer Michael V. DiSalle told the Committee May 15 that the extension bill was essential if inflation was to be checked. Chairman Maybank, however, said, "It is going to be very, very hard to get any bill passed at all."

Maybank suggested that some compromises on farm price ceilings might help pass the bill. DiSalle insisted the existing freeze provisions were too lax. DiSalle also urged extension of rationing authority in case it should be needed in a hurry.

Secretary of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan May 16 supported the subsidy recommendations in the pending bill.

"It might be far cheaper for the country to make limited use of subsidies" he said, "than to raise ceilings in order to provide fair margins for a few processors caught in a squeeze."

Maybank said he opposed general subsidy powers, but said it might be necessary to give subsidies to certain food processors.

Tighe E. Woods, housing expediter, supported rent control provisions of the bill May 16. He predicted a sharp rise in rents if controls were not extended.

Wilbur La Roe, Jr., National Independent Meat Packers Association, protested to the Committee May 17 against the OPS order rolling back beef prices. He said a dollar bill would buy more meat then than at any time since 1929.

NAM Recommendations

William H. Ruffin, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, appeared before the Committee May 18. He recommended that wage-price controls be scrapped, and recommended that inflation be checked principally through use of credit controls, higher taxes and government economy.

Ruffin said the pending bill would give the President "powers comparable to those exercised by foreign dictators." It could, he said, "lead to the destruction of our American economic system."

Ira Mosher, NAM, criticized the Defense Production Act's labor disputes provisions. He said that labor was given an advantage over management and recommended that the Wage Stabilization Board be dropped and that disputes be handled through the Taft-Hartley Act.

Herschel D. Newsom, National Grange, told the Committee that rationing of high-priced, scarce items should precede price and wage controls. Price controls without rationing, he said, would be inflationary. Newsom also criticized the bill's provision for a frozen parity—fixing of farm product parity prices for the duration of the product's marketing period—to replace the existing monthly calculation of parity.

On Beef Price Rollback

Norman Moser, National Livestock Industry Advisory Committee, said May 21 that his group had not been consulted by Price Stabilizer DiSalle on the beef price rollback order.

Loren C. Bamert, American National Cattlemen's Association, said the OPS rollback order was "equivalent to confiscation of property."

Paul C. Smith, Swift and Company, said that rationing should accompany price controls, but predicted that even then the program "simply will not work." The beef price order, he said, "will rob the public of meat." It was proved in World War II, he said, that meat price controls do not work.

James B. Carey, Congress of Industrial Organizations, asked for "more equalization of duties, responsibilities and sacrifices" in the defense effort. He urged that Congress crack down on large corporations, saying they "increase their power at the expense of the small fellow."

Harry Mopsick, National Tenants' Council, asked the Committee May 22 to extend and tighten rent controls. He said added controls were needed to protect servicemen and defense workers. He asked that the local option provisions of the existing law be revoked.

J. F. McCawley, Property Owners of America, criticized rent controls, saying such controls caused artificial shortages and "froze out those who most needed rental housing."

Construction Controls

E. M. Spiegel, National Association of Home Builders, opposed existing construction controls and said that labor and materials would be ample for some time to come if controls were lifted.

Former Senate Majority Leader Scott W. Lucas (D Ill.) appeared May 22 in behalf of the American Finance Conference. Lucas was registered as a lobbyist for the Conference and other organizations. (See p. 697.)

"There is no justification under present conditions for controls on installment sales of automobiles," Lucas said. He recommended that if credit controls on automobiles were continued, they should permit at lease 18 months for payment and require not more than one-third down.

William W. Russell, National Apartment Owners Association, requested May 23 that the "dictatorial" rent control program be abolished. Rent control, he said, means fewer and poorer homes.

Seymour E. Harris, Americans for Democratic Action, said, "We need controls in order to get the best distribution of scarce items and of income. Because our credit, savings and fiscal policies are inadequate, we need to depend more on direct controls than we otherwise would."

Alexander Summer, National Association of Real Estate Boards, recommended May 24 that "the matter of rents be left to the discretion of local and state governments." He also recommended that in areas where housing shortages existed, credit controls be removed from new home construction.

Chester B. Franz, Associated Poultry and Egg Industries, and Cliff D. Carpenter, Institute of American Poultry Industries, told the Committee that price controls on poultry products would prevent the expansion of production and would lead to shortages and black markets.

Farm Bureau Program

Allan B. Kline, American Farm Bureau Federation, said May 28 that wage and price controls should be dropped in favor of a six-point program to:

1. Increase production.
2. End all non - essential government spending.
3. Restrain expanding credit.
4. Encourage private saving.
5. Sell more government bonds to individuals and non-bank investors.
6. Impose higher taxes.

In response to a letter from Ralph M. Besse, Cleveland Electric Illuminating Co., Chairman Maybank said May 28 that the Committee would not approve provisions in the bill which would give federal price stabilization authorities power to rule on public utility rate increases in states where state controls already existed. Those controls, he said, were sufficient.

W. D. Lawson, American Cotton Shippers Association, urged the Committee to drop price controls on cotton and institute a program similar to that proposed on behalf of the Farm Bureau.

John J. Riggle, National Council of Farmer Co-operatives, objected May 28 to the proposed seasonal freeze on farm parity prices and to subsidies on food products. Riggle suggested voluntary anti-inflation organizations.

Former Sen. Francis J. Myers (D Pa.) appeared May 28 on behalf of the National Foundation for Consumer Credit. He was registered as a lobbyist for the Foundation. (See p.697.)

Myers protested consumer credit restrictions, calling them "terrifically inflationary." The money used for large down payments, he said, would otherwise be used to buy government bonds.

John F. Moloney, National Cottonseed Products Association, opposed price controls and suggested a program similar to that backed by the Farm Bureau.

Inflation Cost

George C. Marshall, then Secretary of Defense, testified May 29 that inflation in 11 months had cost the Defense Department about $7 billion of the $35 billion appropriated for military spending. He recommended extension of controls as an anti - inflation measure. The full impact of military procurement would not be felt on the nation's economy until late 1952 or 1953, Marshall said.

Charles C. Hertwig, American Cotton Manufacturers Institute, said existing controls had "stultified production" in the cotton industry. He asked that wage-price controls be dropped.

Returning for a second round of testimony, James B. Carey, Congress of Industrial Organizations, May 30 accused big business of attempting to bribe labor into joining in "scuttling price controls." The Chamber of Commerce of the United States and the National Association of Manufacturers, he said, were trying to "wreck our defense program" and had offered to "share the loot" with labor if labor would help out.

In answer to questions, he said Westinghouse Electrical Corporation offered such a deal. The company, he said, offered to give a nine-cent-an-hour wage increase if the unions would help Westinghouse stretch price ceilings.

Other witnesses May 30 were A. J. McKay, Quality Courts United, who wanted tourist courts eliminated from rent control provisions of the bill; John Robinson, Barbers, Hairdressers and Cosmetologists Union (AFL), who asked that the barber and beauty industries be exempted from price control; and William R. Blake, National Cotton Council, who asked that price ceilings on cotton be ended.

Morton Bodfish, United States Savings and Loan League, said May 31 that provisions in the bill putting controls on all real estate credit were "unnecessary."

Indirect Controls

Rowland Jones Jr., American Retail Federation, appeared before the Committee May 31 to repeat the testimony he gave previously to the House Banking Committee, which held simultaneous hearings on an identical bill (See p. 447). Jones said wage and price controls should be continued only if indirect controls also were imposed.

Jones asked for government economy, pay - as - you - go fiscal policy, encouragement of savings and production, curtailment of bank credit and restrictions on sale of government bonds to banks.

Charles W. Holman, National Milk Producers Federation, appeared May 31 to repeat statements given May 29 before the House Committee. Holman said his group opposed the wage and price control provisions of the existing law as well as new Administration proposals for licensing of businesses and for subsidies to producers of certain scarce, high-priced commodities.

He said that wage-price controls were not then needed and added that controls had been "maladministered." Holman proposed that farm price support programs and marketing agreements be exempted from any price control provisions finally approved, and that minimum ceiling prices be set on dairy products to assure an adequate supply of such commodities.

Chamber Spokesman Testifies

Herman W. Steinkraus, U. S. Chamber of Commerce, testified June 1. He also had appeared previously before the House group. He criticized wage-price controls and urged a program of indirect controls on inflation.

Maurice R. Massey Jr., Mortgage Bankers Association of America, said that the proposed imposition of credit controls on old housing would put the real estate and mortgage business "in great jeopardy."

Charles C. Freed, National Automobile Dealers Association, asked that credit restrictions on auto purchases be eased. Mrs. Elizabeth K. Porter, American Nurses Association, asked for firm economic controls so that the nominal salaries of nurses could cover the cost of living.

Walter P. Reuther, United Automobile Workers (CIO), asked June 4 for "equality of sacrifice" in maintaining high production and stopping inflation. He asked that the percentage mark-up price ceilings be changed to straight "dollar-and-cent" price ceilings.

Reuther accused business representatives of wanting "business as usual." He said the burdens of the inflation fight were falling on the low-income consumers. Reuther asked that consumer credit regulations be made flexible.

Calvin K. Snyder, National Association of Real Estate Boards opposed federal rent controls June 4 and said controls should be left to state and local authorities.

G. L. Ward, representing the National Retail Dry Goods Association and the Limited Price Variety Stores Association, said price controls were not enough and recommended a program of indirect controls.

Tells of Wage Problem

George S. Eaton, National Tool and Die Manufacturers Association, said June 5 that administration of wage ceilings was depriving small concerns of skilled workers. The experienced men, he said, were shifting to large firms that had "escalator" and "merit" wage contracts.

George Terborgh, Machinery and Allied Products Institute, asked that price controls be removed from capital goods. Robert C. Tait, Radio-Television Manufacturers Association, urged that credit controls be lifted from TV sets for 90 days so that swollen inventories could be whittled away.

Edgar S. Idol, American Trucking Associations, and Harley L. Swift, American Transit Association, asked that price control exemptions for truckers be continued.

Ray Suter, speaking for the state Chambers of Commerce of Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Maine, Missouri, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, West Virginia, Wisconsin, East Texas and South Texas, told the Committee June 6 that wage-price controls should be dropped in favor of indirect controls, including increased taxation, credit restrictions, increased promotion of savings bonds and cuts in federal spending.

Michael M. Donohue, purchasing agent of Allegheny County, Pa., urged establishment of a single agency to rule on construction and supply needs of all government agencies.

George P. Lamb, American Bar Association's Committee on Trade Associations, recommended that the bill be amended to allow business advisory committees to work more closely with trade associations.

William Green, American Federation of Labor, testified on the bill June 7, going over the testimony he gave two days earlier to the House group. (See p. 447.)

Committee

The Committee ended its open hearings after the June 7 session and started a series of closed meetings to amend the Administration draft of the bill. Although the sessions were closed to the press, Senators made public many of the day-to-day decisions of the Committee.

First action was to reject a nine-month extension of the existing law. A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) had offered the simple extension as a compromise.

Then the group started a section-by-section study of the bill.

A new rent control program was approved. It included machinery to recontrol defense area housing and to bring other areas voluntarily under rent control.

The Committee June 15 voted a 20 per cent increase in rent ceilings above the 1942 level. The increase was to include all rent boosts granted since that date, except hardship, capital improvement and tax-increase concessions. Vote in the closed session was reported to be 9-4.

The group turned down a flexible boost offered by John W. Bricker (R Ohio) which would have allowed increases ranging from 12 to 37 per cent.

Wage-Price Decisions

The Committee turned to wage-price controls June 18. It rejected 4-8 a proposal to drop all such control authority. The vote was party-line. The Committee also rejected the President's request for annual farm parity freezes.

A restriction on price ceilings and rollbacks was voted, 7-6, June 19. The provision stated that no ceiling price would become effective which was below either "(a) the price prevailing just before the date of issuance of the (rollback order) or (b) the price prevailing during the period Jan. 25, 1951, to Feb. 24, 1951, inclusive."

The existing law permitted rollbacks to pre-Korea levels. The Committee amendment would have cancelled future beef price rollbacks, already ordered, and would have blocked other price orders on manufactured goods.

The Committee also voted to extend the maximum payment period on automobiles from 15 to 18 months. Similar relaxations on radio and television sets were rejected.

Expiration dates in the bill were set as follows: Wage and price controls section, March 1, 1952; rent controls, March 1, 1952; priority and allocation powers, June 30, 1952.

A provision for a Small Defense Plants Corporation was approved 10-2. This was to be a government corporation designed to aid small business in getting a greater share of defense contracts. This action was reversed June 21, and the Committee agreed to put the same provisions into a separate bill.

The Committee June 21 defeated 6-7 a move to cancel the restrictions voted June 19 on price roll-backs. Irving M. Ives (R N.Y.) and Robertson were reported to have switched their stands on the proposal — Ives from for to against; Robertson from against to for.

The Committee also defeated 5-8 a move by Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) to extend the existing law for one year.

The Senate Committee voted 12-1 for its revised bill, in closed session. Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.) was reported to have voted against the bill.

Committee's Reports

The Senate Banking and Currency Committee formally reported its bill to the Senate June 21. In doing so, the much - amended measure was given a new number (S 1717).

The majority report of the Committee criticized Administration use of the existing controls law and said that further power to roll prices back to pre-Korea levels "might act as a deterrent to production."

A minority reported signed by J. William Fulbright (D Ark.), John J. Sparkman (D Ala.), Douglas, William Benton (D Conn.) and Blair Moody (D Mich.) charged that the anti-rollback amendment in the bill "hamstrung" inflation control.

A supplementary statement, signed by Douglas, Benton and Moody, criticized other sections of the bill.

A further statement by Ives asked that price rollbacks be permitted.

Floor Action

The Senate opened floor debate on the controls extension bill June 25. Maybank led support for the Committee measure. He told the Senate that the Administration had been given the power in the 1950 Defense Production Act to roll prices back to the pre-Korea level. "The Administration did not desire to do this," he said, "but apparently wished prices to rise so that increased taxes could be collected from larger incomes, and thereby attempt to balance the budget."

The partial freeze ordered Jan. 25, 1951, and the isolated rollbacks ordered since, Maybank said, represented misuse of the 1950 Act. He said the rollback restriction in the bill was necessary to avoid "injustice to the manufacturers and producers who cannot be expected to plan future operations under such uncertainties as those in which they are now living."

Ives, however, insisted the anti-rollback provision would work a hardship on businesses which did not substantially increase their prices after the war started. Those which did boost prices, he said, should be subjected to a rollback to put them in line with the businesses which tried to hold prices down.

Maybank replied that the pending bill would permit low prices to be raised where necessary so that all businesses would be on a par. Ives said that such an action would mean a general price rise of five to six per cent and would be harmful to the general economy.

Douglas Amendment

Then Douglas called up an amendment to strike the anti-rollback provision from the bill. He said the provision would block rollbacks already announced for a variety of industries. Those rollbacks, he added, would save consumers "several billion dollars."

Douglas said such rollbacks would take into consideration production cost increases but would still "restore the relationship between prices (and costs) that existed during the last normal month we had, namely, June 1950."

John J. Williams (R Del.) then offered to amend the Douglas amendment by suspending all farm price support for the duration of the Act. The Senate adjourned for the day.

The Senate resumed work on the bill June 26. Moody said that a comprehensive controls program was necessary because neither increased production nor a freed economy could provide necessary war materials without inflation.

Dirksen told the Senate he would not vote for the bill if it contained wage-price-rent control features. He said he would support provisions for allocations and priorities and for credit controls. The economy would "level off," he said, if direct controls were dropped. Direct controls, he said, deal "only with symptoms."

Dirksen suggested tighter bank credit controls and reduced federal spending.

Williams Proposal Defeated

The Williams farm price support amendment finally reached a vote June 27. It was defeated 4-78 on roll-call vote (see p. 529). Debate then reverted to the Douglas amendment.

Andrew F. Schoeppel (R Kan.) defended the bill's freeze on price rollbacks. He said it would permit businessmen to operate without fear of sudden disruptive price changes.

The Senate then rejected two substitutes offered for the Douglas amendment. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) asked that the anti-rollback provision be made to apply only to cattle and sheep. This was turned down 25-56 on roll-call vote June 27.

Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) offered an amendment which would have blocked all future rollbacks — even those to the January-February 1951 level permitted by the Committee-approved bill. It would have retained the beef price rollback already in effect. This was rejected 39-49 on roll-call vote.

The Douglas amendment itself then came to a vote. It was defeated 26-61 on roll-call vote. A majority of both parties opposed it, Democrats 21-25; Republicans 5-36.

The Douglas faction then sought a compromise by backing an amendment by Moody to suspend the anti-rollback provision for 60 days. This, they argued, would give the OPS a chance to put into effect rollbacks already ordered, but would ban future drastic shakeups. The amendment lost 22-61 on roll-call vote.

Plant Dispersal

The Senate then turned to an amendment by O'Mahoney designed to encourage dispersal of new war plants into present non - industrial areas. The measure was opposed on the floor by industrial-state Senators and then voted down 25-56 on roll call vote.

Hugh Butler (R Neb.) offered an amendment to ban slaughtering quotas for livestock. He said existing quotas were illegal, were an indirect means of price control and would lead to black markets.

Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.) opposed the amendment. He said quotas were needed so that black marketeers could not compete with legitimate slaughterers for available animals. He said that World War II OPA experience showed that quotas meant fewer black markets and lower prices. Butler, however, said that animals not included in the quotas would go into black markets.

The Senate accepted the Butler amendment 47-33 on roll-call vote.

Rent Ceiling Vote

On June 28, the Senate turned down an amendment by Dirksen to raise rent ceilings as much as 37 per cent above the 1943 level. The roll-call vote was 19-68.

An amendment by Pat McCarran (D Nev.) to end exemption of defense agencies from the Federal Administrative Procedures Act was voted down on a roll call, 33-51. Maybank said the proposal would severely disrupt defense agency work.

On another roll-call vote, the Senate rejected 15-71 an amendment by Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) to strike out authority of local governments to go under federal rent control at their own request.

Millikin then offered an amendment to permit rollbacks on certain prices which he said, had been raised "unconscionably" since Korea, but exempting farm products and directing the price administrator to take into consideration production cost increases on products rolled back. Such rollbacks would not be subject to the January-February, 1951, price level limitation.

Millikin told the Senate that his amendment was likely to be the only modification of the anti-rollback provision that a majority would accept.

The amendment was accepted on voice vote after an amendment by Wayne Morse (R Ore.) to extend the Millikin proposal to some farm products was rejected on roll-call vote, 22-64.

On another roll-call vote, an amendment by Dirksen to assure most retailers and wholesalers a percentage of profit on most items equal to that they received just prior to Korea was rejected 33-51.

Sales As Basis?

Francis Case (R S.D.) sought an amendment to exempt from price controls all retail stores with less than $30,000 annual gross sales. It was rejected on a 19-61 roll call.

Douglas next offered an amendment to permit a rollback on any commodity of 12 per cent below the price prevailing on the date of control. He lowered the figure to 10 per cent on the request of Case, but the proposal was turned down by a 26-58 roll call.

Benton urged the adoption of a proposal to allow the government to construct defense plants. The Senate rejected it 25-57 on a roll call.

An amendment to provide for increases in ceiling prices to compensate for increases in wages, salaries and cost of materials was introduced by Ferguson. The Senate voted it down, 15 to 67 on roll call.

Second Wherry Proposal

Wherry then proposed changing the bill's language so that price ceilings could not be lower than either the price prevailing just before regulation or the price prevailing from Jan. 25 through Feb. 24, 1951. The amendment passed on a roll call, 49-33. Prior to adoption of this amendment the ceiling price could be the lower of the two alternate prices. Wherry denied that his amendment would conflict with the Millikin rollback amendment. This Wherry amendment was identical in effect with the first Wherry price ceiling amendment.

Edward J. Thye (R Minn.) called up an amendment prohibiting a ceiling price to producers of milk or butterfat used in dairy products unless the Secretary of Agriculture determined the price was reasonable. It was rejected on a 29-52 roll call.

Long's motion to reconsider the Senate vote of June 27 adopting an amendment to prohibit OPS from placing quotas on meat slaughtering was rejected 27-53, on roll call. The quota amendment had been sponsored by Butler.

Moody offered a complete substitute bill to extend the existing Act, with certain changes, for nine months. It called for a 20 per cent increase in rents, creation of a Small Defense Plants' Administration, and a two-year extension of fats and oils import control. The Senate rejected it 22 to 59, on roll call.

When Senators voted on final passage of the bill, Lehman and Benton declined to vote. They answered "present" when their names were called. In ensuing debate over whether they should be excused from voting, two roll calls were taken. The Senate refused to permit a "present" vote. Both Senators then voted "yea," although they said they had wanted a tighter controls bill. The bill was passed, 71 to 10 on roll call.

For final provisions of the Senate bill, see Provisions section, p. 438.)

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.) — Cut to six per cent down payments required of veterans on homes costing less than $12,000. Voice vote.

Hugh Butler (R Neb.) — Ban slaughtering quotas for livestock. Roll call, 47-33.

George D. Aiken (R Vt.) — Specify that nothing in the bill would supersede provisions of the Farm Price Support Act of 1949 or the Farm Marketing Agreement Act of 1937. Voice.

Eugene D. Millikin (R Colo.) — Permit limited rollbacks on high priced non-farm products. Voice.

Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) — Bar price ceilings lower than either the price prevailing just before the regulation or the price prevailing from Jan. 25 to Feb. 24, 1951. Roll call, 49-33.

Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.) — Ban until June 30, 1953, the import of fats and oils, dairy products, peanuts and rice products if the Secretary of Agriculture deems the imports would impair the defense effort. Voice.

Wherry — Require fair return on ceiling price on slaughtered meat. Voice, then standing, vote.

John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) — Create Small Defense Plants Administration to encourage small business participation in the defense effort. Voice.

J. Allen Frear, Jr. (D. Del.) — Include a representative from each state concerned among the policy-making officers of regional offices. Voice, then standing, vote.

Wherry — Extend for two years the Military Housing Act. Accepted Burnet R. Maybank (D S.C.) amendment to modify Wherry amendment to include the Defense Housing Act which covers the Military Housing Act. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

John J. Williams (R Del.) — Suspend all farm price support for the duration of the Act. Roll call, 4-78.

Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) — Permit rollbacks on all prices except beef and mutton. Roll call, 25-63.

Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) — Block all future rollbacks, but permit freezes. Roll call, 39-49.

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) — Strike out section banning rollbacks below the January-February 1951 level. Roll call, 26-61.

Blair Moody (D Mich.) — Suspend limitation on rollbacks for 60 days. Roll call, 22-61.

O'Mahoney — Encourage dispersal of new war plants into present non-industrial areas. Roll call, 25-56.

Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.) — Raise rent ceilings according to a formula which would provide increases as much as 37 per cent above 1943 level. Roll call, 19-68.

Pat McCarran (D Nev.) — End exemption of defense agencies from Federal Administrative Procedures Act. Roll call, 33-51.

Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) — Strike out authority of local governments to go under federal rent control at their own request. Roll call, 15-71.

Wayne Morse (R Ore.) — Amend Millikin amendment on price rollbacks to include limited roll-backs on farm products, Roll call, 22-64.

Dirksen — Assure retailers and wholesalers the same percentage of profit they received just prior to Korea. Roll call, 33-51.

J. William Fulbright (D Ark.) — Suspend certain price ceiling regulations for those who keep their average price two per cent below the ceiling for 60 days. First by voice vote, then by division.

Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.), Douglas, Moody, William Benton (D Conn.) and John O. Pastore (D R.I.) —Instruct the President to consult in policy making with representatives of businessmen, farmers, workers and consumers "insofar as practicable." Agreed to by voice, then rejected on division vote.

Francis Case (R S.D.) — Exempt retail stores with less than $30,000 annual gross sales from price controls. Roll call, 19-61.

Douglas — Permit rollbacks on any service or commodity up to maximum of 10 per cent of the price prevailing just before the first order putting that service or commodity under a ceiling price. Roll call, 26-58.

Case — Amend Douglas rollback amendment, which had been introduced with a 12 per cent maximum figure, to permit rollbacks up to 10 per cent maximum. Accepted by Douglas and incorporated into his amendment, which was rejected.

William Benton (D Conn.) — Give the President power to acquire real estate and build or add to national defense production facilities, to operate or lease government plants, and to install facilities in privately-owned plants. Roll call, 25-57.

Russell B. Long (D La.) — Amend Benton amendment by striking out three words. (A maneuver to obtain time to speak). Voice.

Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) — Provide for mandatory increase in ceiling prices to compensate for increase in wages, salaries, cost of materials or services. Roll call, 15-67.

Edward J. Thye (R Minn.) — Issue no ceiling price to producers for milk or butterfat used in dairy products unless the Secretary of Agriculture determines such prices are reasonable. Roll-call vote, 29-52.

Long — Authorize $50 million for river and harbor and flood control improvements. Ruled out on point of order.

Lehman — Authorize differential payments by government to marginal and high-cost producers to cover difference between regular ceiling prices and added cost of production. Voice.

Douglas — Repeal $10,000 limitation on price overcharge suits. Voice, then standing vote.

Ferguson — Require uniform and specific standards in establishing ceiling prices to be applied without discrimination to persons and industries in the general business classification. Voice.

Lehman (D N.Y.) — Make it illegal to deny rental housing to tenant solely on grounds that tenant has children and make such crime punishable by maximum fine of $500 or 60 days imprisonment, or both. Voice, then standing vote.

Moody — Extend for nine months existing Defense Production Act and existing rent laws with committee — approved 20 per cent increase, create Small Defense Plants Administration as proposed by Sparkman and grant two-year extension of fats and oils import control as proposed by Magnuson. Roll call, 22-57.

MOTION REJECTED

Long — Motion to reconsider vote by which the Senate June 27 adopted Butler amendment prohibiting OPS from placing quotas on meat slaughtering. Roll call vote, 27-53.

HOUSE

Hearings

The House Banking and Currency Committee opened its hearings May 8. Before it was a bill (HR 3871) introduced by Chairman Brent Spence (D Ky.) at the request of the President. It was identical with the original Senate bill. As in the Senate Committee, Defense Mobilizer Wilson was the first witness. His testimony followed lines laid down in the Senate.

Wilson also said that controls in addition to those sought in the bill might be necessary. He agreed with Jesse P. Wolcott (R Mich.) that reserve requirements by the Federal Reserve System might have to be raised, along with discount rates.

John D. Small, Chairman of the Munitions Board, May 9 supported extension of the Defense Production Act. He also asked that the Defense Department be permitted to make long term contracts for such things as machine tools and electronic equipment.

William McChesney Martin, Jr., head of the Federal Reserve System, supported the bill May 10 and told the Committee that anti-inflation action had been effective in many instances during the previous year.

He asked the group to bring existing houses under the credit controls then applicable to new construction.

Johnston, DiSalle, Brannan

Economic Stabilizer Johnston appeared before the Committee May 11. His testimony followed the lines of his statements before the Senate Banking Committee. He said the Administration did not plan to roll back all prices, but would push back certain selected prices when necessary.

Price Stabilizer DiSalle also testified May 11, repeating his endorsement of the extension bill.

Secretary of Agriculture Brannan talked to the House Committee May 14. He said the OPS rollback order on beef prices would not hurt production. He said those producers who might lose money had been warned well in advance that they were taking a chance.

After sharp questioning, Brannan said he supported the rollback order. He also endorsed the Defense Production Act extension bill, defending curbs on commodity speculation and the parity freeze proposal of the Administration. He said the new proposals could not hurt farmers or legitimate "hedgers."

Edwin T. Gibson, acting Defense Production Administrator, endorsed the bill, and asked that his agency be given more authority.

Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer told the Committee May 15 that a broad program of direct and indirect controls was needed "to gear ourselves for a great production without upsetting our economy."

Secretary of Labor Tobin said it would be impossible to keep wages under control if the cost of living index continues to climb. He pointed out that three million workers received automatic wage adjustments to accompany cost of living changes.

Woods on Rent Control

Tighe Woods, Housing Expediter, talked to the Banking Committee May 18. He said that the biggest problem was the control of rents near military camps.

Manly Fleischmann, National Production Administration head, said that "flying squadrons" were being organized to stop black-marketing. He said that black market steel was not yet a serious problem.

James B. Carey, CIO, gave testimony May 21 similar to that he had given in his first appearance before the Senate group. Herschel D. Newsom, National Grange, also duplicated his Senate appearance when he talked to the House group May 22.

Ray S. Paul, Rath Packing Co., and A. G. Pickett, Kansas State Live Stock Association, both told the Committee that price controls on meat would lead to black markets and would be harmful to the meat industry.

William F. Brooks, National Grain Trade Council, appeared before the House Banking and Currency Committee May 26 to criticize sections of the House extension measure. Brooks said he was not convinced that the Defense Production Act was in the public interest, and protested provisions in the extension bill which would raise margin requirements on commodity exchanges and, he said, would subsidize production of scarce, high-priced commodities.

Harold Bishop, Boston Wool Trade Association, and W. H. Steinwer, National Wool Growers Association, both protested against controls on the wool industry.

Sees Threat To Production

Al Hayes, International Association of Machinists (AFL), told the Committee in a letter May 28 that the housing shortages in defense areas would have to be eased or else production of warplanes would be slowed down.

Rowland Jones, Jr., American Retail Federation, told the Committee May 28 that price controls would not work unless other basic sources of inflation were also stabilized. He recommended government economy, encouragement of production and savings, and curtailment of bank credit.

Alton M. Costley, National Automobile Dealers Association, asked that credit restrictions on auto sales be eased. Committee member Wright Patman (D Tex.), said he favored a drastic liberalization of such controls.

William H. Ruffin, National Association of Manufacturers, also testified May 28, repeating the criticism given the bill before the Senate Banking Committee.

Irwin D. Wolf, National Retail Dry Goods Association, suggested improvements in price stabilization. He criticized ceilings on luxury items and asked that price regulations be worked out in consultation with industry representatives.

C Of C Opposes Bill

Herman W. Steinkraus, Chamber of Commerce of the United States, said May 31 that wage and price controls were encouraging inflation. He recommended indirect controls on credit expansion, pay-as-we-go taxation and government economy.

Referring to CIO testimony May 30 before the Senate Committee (See Page 447), Steinkraus said "it was a cheap trick" for Carey to accuse business groups of offering to conspire to junk wage-price controls.

Steinkraus said two more years of existing controls would put the nation's economy "in a hell of a mess."

Former Sen. Lucas (D Ill.), one time Senate majority leader, and former Sen. Myers (D Pa.), Lucas' majority whip, appeared before the Committee June 1 to give testimony previously given before the Senate group. Both men were registered lobbyists for the organizations they represented at the hearings.

Lucas, speaking for the American Finance Conference, criticized existing credit regulations on automobiles and asked that they be eased. Myers, representing the National Foundation for Consumer Credit, urged that consumer credit controls be dropped.

Calvin K. Snyder, National Association of Real Estate Boards, asked June 4 that rent controls be left in the hands of local governments. Similar views were given by Morton Bodfish, Savings and Loan League; William Schmidt, Small Property Owners Association of America; and William W. Russell, National Apartment Owners Association. All had testified previously before the Senate committee.

AFL's Green Testifies

William Green, American Federation of Labor, told the Committee June 5 that price control would have to be effective if wages were to be controlled. He asked for a stronger rent control program, a closer check on controls violations, dollars-and-cents price ceilings, commodity exchange controls and fewer exemptions from controls.

Edmund F. Wagner, Commerce and Industry Association of New York, opposed wage-price and federal rent controls. Mrs. Leslie Wright, National Federation of Women's Clubs, urged effective economic controls to check high rentals and distribute the burden of the wartime economy.

John J. Gunther, Americans for Democratic Action, said that both direct and indirect controls were needed.

George E. Leighty, Railway Labor Executives Association, asked the Committee June 7 to set up a separate panel to handle railway labor disputes.

William E. Russell, Metropolitan Fair Rent Committee of New York; Burtram A. Weight, Apartment House Association of Utah; E. M. Spiegel, National Association of Home Builders, and James F. Cook, Jr., National Association of Building Owners and Managers all appeared June 7 to protest extension of federal rent controls.

R. L. Vanderslice, Chicago Residential Hotel Association, asked the Committee June 6 to end federal rent controls. Clenwood J. Sherrard, American Hotel Association, opposed reimposition of rent controls on hotels. Patrick J. O'Donovan, California State Apartment Conference; G. G. Bauman, Small Property Owners League of Los Angeles; Louis V. Ramoneda, American Motor Hotel Associations; and Jack Pinkston, Home and Property Owners Alliance of Texas, opposed federal rent controls.

Philip Schiff, American Association of Social Workers, endorsed the bill and asked that rent controls be extended.

Committee

The Committee ended its open hearings June 7 and started a section-by-section study of the measure behind closed doors. Highlights of the daily action were reported in unofficial talks with newsmen.

The group voted June 12 to give the President more flexible power to determine priorities and allocations and to block hoarding. The Committee agreed June 13 to prevent the President from selling any farm commodity below the ceiling price, agreed to remove limitations on government purchase of raw materials, and voted to permit condemnation of real estate needed for the defense effort.

Defense Secretary Marshall talked to the Committee in a closed session June 14 and urged stronger controls legislation even if the emergency abated.

A section permitting government subsidies for certain high-cost, scarce commodities was approved June 18 on what was reported to be a tie vote, 11-11. By 14-8, provisions permitting the government to own and operate defense plants, were approved.

The Committee on a 12-10 vote struck out a provision authorizing unlimited funds for subsidies and defense plant operation.

Food price rollbacks were limited to 10 per cent of price levels of May 19, 1951. This would have blocked existing OPS orders for future beef price cuts.

On June 19 the Committee voted a new set of restrictions on consumer credit. Payment periods on new autos were extended to 18 months; down payments on used cars were cut from one-third to one-fourth and payments were extended to 18 months; television and radio set down payments were cut from 25 to 15 per cent and payment periods extended from 15 to 18 months; furniture down-payments were cut from 15 to 10 per cent and payments extended from 15 to 21 months and payment for residential repairs was extended from 30 to 36 months.

License Proposal Dropped

The Committee also voted to drop the Administration proposal for authority to license businesses. The vote was 15-7. Limits on damages for which price ceiling violators would be liable were removed.

The Committee June 20 voted 14-6 to drop proposals for credit controls on sale of old housing and also rejected Administration requests for rent controls on commercial properties.

Extension of federal rent controls for one year then was approved on an 18-6 vote. The House rent provisions were similar to those voted earlier by the Senate Committee, but set standards for designation, by the Secretary of Defense and Defense Mobilizer, of critical defense housing areas.

The Committee also voted to suspend credit restrictions on new low-cost housing in such areas.

The Committee rejected requests for power to fix margins for trading on the commodity exchanges and for increased bank reserve requirements.

A provision to establish a Small Defense Plant Corporation was approved by the Committee June 21. The Committee then rejected 8-16 a proposal by Albert M. Cole (R Kan.) to drop all rent controls except in critical defense areas.

The bill was given final approval June 21 on a vote reported to be 21-5. It was then ready for Rules Committee clearance and floor debate.

Floor Action

The House took up its one-year extension bill July 5. During the last days of July, both House and Senate had completed action on a one-month extension, which kept controls alive while the House acted on the long-range bill. (For details of action on the one-month extension measure, see p. 461.)

After a 45-minute wait until a quorum was present, Rep. Brent Spence (D Ky.) chairman of the Banking Committee, opened the controls debate with a warning that the nation faced "disaster" if economic controls were allowed to lapse.

Spence, fearing a letdown in defense preparations as a result of peace talks in Korea, told his colleagues, "It takes a Pearl Harbor to arouse a people; it takes very little to lull them to sleep."

Rep. Jesse P. Wolcott (R Mich.) conceded that inflation was a serious problem, but said he was tired of hearing that there would be an economic collapse unless controls were continued in the exact form asked by the President.

Wolcott called for indirect controls, under which the Federal Reserve system would increase its interest rate on loans to banks and bank reserve requirements would be boosted. In that way, he said, private credit could be curbed and inflation halted.

Rep. Paul Cunningham (R Iowa) argued that the Defense Production Act had failed to hold down prices. Since its enactment a year earlier, the cost of living had increased steadily, he said.

Administration Criticized

As the House entered its second day of debate July 6, several Republicans took the floor to criticize Administration handling of its controls powers.

Gordon L. McDonough (R Calif.) said the failure to invoke an immediate freeze of wages, prices and credit the previous fall caused "frustration and confusion."

Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) said a good controls law was needed for the emergency, but warned that "bad administration and politics can ruin the best intentions in the world."

A Democrat, Albert Rains (Ala.), conceded that the Administration "committed one of the most serious blunders" by failing to order price controls soon enough, but said Congress should strengthen the controls law. Rains also told the House that roll-backs would be difficult, if not impossible to apply.

The House began taking up amendments July 9. It had resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole, where decisions were subject to reversal up to the time the bill actually was passed by the House.

Credit Controls

Wolcott offered an amendment making it the intention of Congress that the government hold off on price and wage controls until it had used tight credit controls.

Democrats stoutly denounced it, with Spence saying the Wolcott proposal would "scuttle the (controls) bill." Louis C. Rabaut (D Mich.) called it the "horse-meat amendment."

Christian A. Herter (R Mass.) suggested a change in the wording of Wolcott's amendment so it would allow direct controls only when indirect controls were in effect.

After an amendment by Charles J. Kersten (R Wis.), similar to Herter's was rejected on voice vote, the House approved the Herter change on a teller vote, 151-147, but then rejected the altered Wolcott amendment, on a teller count of 149-169.

The vote went along party lines and was the Administration's first important victory.

The Democrats held sway again as they beat down a Banking Committee amendment to prohibit importation of any article containing materials restricted to domestic manufacturers under allocation programs.

Abraham J. Multer (D N.Y.), who had backed the amendment when it was before the Banking Committee, sought to change its language on the House floor, so it would be discretionary. This was rejected on voice vote and then the original amendment was turned down on division vote, 77-96.

Slaughter Quotas Ruled Out

The next day, July 10, the House ran contrary to Administration wishes on three amendments. It adopted a proposal by August H. Andresen (R Minn.) to restrict imports on fats and oils, peanuts, dairy products and rice if they interfered with domestic industry. Two substitute proposals by Wright Patman (D Tex.) and Spence simply extending the present fats and oils import controls were defeated.

The House then agreed to a Wolcott amendment to prevent the President from making exceptions in anti-hoarding orders on scarce materials. It next turned to a proposal by Clifford R. Hope (R Kan.) to outlaw the use of slaughtering quotas.

Hope maintained that even with regulation the slaughtering quota system would encourage black-market operations instead of discouraging them, as intended.

Patman and Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.) said the intent of the quota system was to channel the meat supply through the normal trade routes, and that the quotas are adjusted upward when additional supplies become available.

Debate continued for nearly two hours before the amendment was agreed to on a 200-112 teller vote.

Dispersal Plan Defeated

On July 11 the House took up some of the 57 amendments planned by the Banking Committee, which has jurisdiction over the Defense Production Act. The amendment providing for dispersal of defense plants quickly drew opposition and in the ensuing debate Congressmen from industrial areas opposed it.

It was sponsored by Rains, and proposed that no new plant facilities be built with government aid unless the President determined that the location resulted in dispersal of production capacity needed for national security.

Majority Leader John W. McCormack (D Mass.), James T. Patterson (R Conn.) and Edith Nourse Rogers (R Mass.) were among eastern Congressmen speaking against the amendment. McDonough, George D. O'Brien (D Mich.), and Frances P. Bolton (R Ohio), also opposed it.

Speaking for the proposal were Spence, who said it was purely a national security measure, Walter E. Rogers (D Tex.) and Rains.

The line-up was sectional, and Easterners expressed fear of losing heavy industry to the south and west. McDonough said the amendment would be a step in the direction of regimented industry.

The vote against the dispersal plan was 79-134, on division.

Defense Plant Authority

The next day, July 12, the House knocked out of the controls bill authority for the President to acquire and operate industrial plants for defense purposes. Both Republicans and Southern Democrats backed a Wolcott amendment to kill the plant-acquiring authority.

Chet Holifield (D Calif.) appealed for Republican support of the additional power sought, since it was supported by Charles E. Wilson, defense mobilization director.

George A. Dondero (R Mich.) praised Wilson, but said even he "can become overly enthusiastic." Republicans contended the proposed authority was so broad that it conceivably could lead to nationalization of all industry, though they conceded they did not believe the Administration had that in mind.

An amendment by Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) to make the plant-acquiring powers subject to approval by the Defense Production Administration was adopted, but was later set aside when the House agreed to the Wolcott amendment by a 159-139 teller vote, thus wiping out the proposed Presidential authority.

Chairman Harold D. Cooley (D N.C.) of the Agriculture Committee next led a fight for the adoption of his amendment to remove the food-subsidy provision from the controls bill. He was backed by farm state Representatives.

Termed "Brannan Plan"

Cooley said the subsidy provision was, in effect, the same plan advocated by Agriculture Secretary Charles F. Brannan. Hope called the subsidies an inflationary effort to have the government pay part of everyone's grocery bill.

Herman P. Eberharter (D Pa.) opposed the Cooley amendment and told the House that the government-provided subsidies for farmers and a proposal to reduce the city dweller's food bill "shouldn't be laughed off."

The Cooley amendment was agreed to July 12 on voice vote.

The House refused July 13 to grant authority which President Truman had requested to establish new government corporations, by executive decree, to implement the defense effort.

It agreed to an amendment by Porter Hardy, Jr. (D Va.) striking this provision from the controls bill, Hardy said "all government corporations should be chartered by Congress." His stand was backed by George Meader (R Mich.) and Fred L. Crawford (R Mich.).

The same day the House took four votes on a proposal by James G. Donovan (D N.Y) to create a centralized authority within the Department of Interior to handle the strategic mineral and metals program. It finally was rejected on a division vote, 59-95.

Debate on Rollbacks

The House July 17 debated a number of anti-rollback amendments.

It first considered a Republican-sponsored price control compromise offered by Wolcott continuing the price rollbacks already in effect, but prohibiting all future rollbacks. It provided that ceilings on non-farm items could be adjusted up or down to reflect increases or decreases in actual factory, labor and related costs. The wording of the Wolcott amendment was similar to the Millikin-Wherry amendments to the Senate bill. (See page 445.)

Despite Wolcott's statement to the House that his proposal was "the most sensible compromise we can get," his amendment was rejected by a division vote, 65-129.

The House next rejected an amendment by E. E. Cox (D Ga.) putting a flat ban on all price rollbacks, past or future. The rejection was by division vote, 89-147.

The Republicans from northern urban centers split from the coalition on the next vote. By a teller vote of 124-217 the House rejected an amendment sponsored by Cooley which would have wiped out the 10 per cent rollback on beef prices and would have banned all future rollbacks on farm commodities. Cooley said he was "unalterably opposed to the principle involved in rollbacks," and charged the beef rollback already in effect had cost cattlemen $700 million.

Called "Special Privilege"

Opponents vigorously attacked the Cooley proposal as a "special privilege" amendment for farmers. Keating told his colleagues, "we must stand firmly against all efforts, whatever their source, to raise the grocery and meat bills of American families in order to cater to the interests of well-organized groups who have facilities for expounding and emphasizing their point of view not available to the average housewife."

Reva Beck Bosone (D Utah) sang a few bars of "The Old Grey Mare Ain't What She Used to Be." and said that she could only afford hamburger — at 70 cents a pound — on a Representative's salary.

"I wonder what people who make only $3,000 a year are feeding their families," she said.

After rejecting the Cooley amendment, the House then agreed to an amendment by the Banking Committee to preserve the 10 per cent beef price rollback which took effect May 19, and to prohibit further rollbacks on agricultural commodities. It was agreed to by teller vote, 207-123.

The House then agreed to another Banking Committee amendment deleting from the bill an Administration bid for authority to license businesses, by standing vote, 127-27. It rejected an amendment by Henry O. Talle (R Iowa) which would have required the Secretary of Agriculture to approve OPS ceiling prices on agricultural products. The rejection was on standing vote, 61-87.

On Meat Ceilings

The first amendment voted on July 18 was designed to insure packers and processors a reasonable profit on their products. Introduced by Albert M. Cole (R Kan.), it provided that no ceiling should be set on products from processing cattle, calves, lambs, sheep, and hogs, which did not allow for a reasonable margin of profit to each segment of industry as a group and on each type of animal. Cole said his amendment would aid small packers and slaughterers, while Andresen said it would prevent black markets.

Spence, McCormack and Patman, urged its defeat on the grounds that it was an anti-consumer amendment, insuring a profit for the "middleman," not the farmer. With solid Republican and some Southern Democratic backing, it was agreed to by teller vote, 160-144.

The coalition next operated successfully to win House agreement on an amendment by W. R. Poage (D Tex.), by a teller vote, 116-102. It would establish a price ceiling formula taking into consideration:

1) The current cost of the material, or the parity price, whichever is higher; 2) all costs incurred in processing or manufacturing and distribution; and 3) a reasonable profit based on not less than 85 per cent of the average profit earned for each item during the three most profitable years from 1946-1949.

As Poage introduced it, it applied only to goods "derived in whole or in substantial part from an agricultural commodity" but it was amended by Cole of Kansas to include all manufactured or processed goods. The Cole amendment was also agreed to by the House on a division vote, 96-53.

Poage said the amendment would insure high production. Spence called the amendments "immoral." In a statement, Price Stabilizer DiSalle said the Poage-Cole amendments were "cost plus, guaranteed-profit," and would "destroy the entire price - control program."

Wage Board Decisions

After failing to turn back the Poage-Cole amendments, the Administration forces rallied later to defeat two attempts to strip the Wage Stabilization Board of its arbitration powers and change its makeup.

The House rejected by a teller vote of 152-190 an amendment by Kersten to limit the Board's powers to formulate general policies and regulations relating to wage and salary stabilization and relegate it to an advisory capacity in interpreting such policies in individual cases.

It then rejected by teller vote of 113-217, an amendment by Wingate H. Lucas (D Tex.) which carried the same limitation of powers as the Kersten amendment and provided also that the present tripartite board of industry, labor and public members be reconstituted so that the public membership on the board would exceed the combined labor and industry membership, and include at least one labor member not affiliated with the CIO or AFL.

Cleveland M. Bailey (D W. Va.) said the Lucas amendment represented the desire of "disciples of hate . . . to punish labor for alleged offenses in the past." Francis E. Walter (D Pa.) predicted the amendment would "invite strikes."

Lucas and Kersten stoutly defended their amendments, however. "I am for the public," Lucas said, "not a super-imposed labor disputes agency. I am opposed to the AFL and the CIO, and I am opposed to the National Association of Manufacturers," Lucas declared.

Four-Month Freeze

The coalition July 19 handed Administration forces another defeat as the House agreed to an amendment on teller vote, 180-151, providing for a four-month "freeze" on prices and wages at July 7 levels, except for farm commodities selling below parity. The amendment was sponsored by James C. Davis (D Ga.), who said its purpose was to give the nation "a breathing spell" in the upward spiral of inflation. Donald W. Nicholson (R Mass.) said Congress could extend the freeze "another four months and another four months" after the first period expired.

Efforts by John E. Fogarty (D R.I.) and Holifield to water down the Davis amendment failed. Rains called the Davis proposal "a political maneuver" which would kill price controls.

Most of the final July 20-21 House session on controls was spent in brief consideration of about 75 amendments — mostly minor. Debate either was sharply limited or banned altogether. Votes were not recorded.

Among the more important amendments was one by A. S. Herlong Jr., (D Fla.) to permit sellers to keep their normal percentage margin of profit. Herlong told the House that existing regulations frequently forced sellers to cut their percentage markup. Extra production costs, he said, were added to the selling price dollarwise, but not percentagewise. This, Herlong said, "puts the squeeze on the little man" who cannot come to Washington to ask for relief.

Majority Leader McCormack said the Herlong amendment plus the Poage-Cole amendment "guaranteed profits for everybody in every segment of their activity."

The House approved the Herlong proposal on voice vote.

Attacks "Regulation W"

Patman moved to abolish "Regulation W" — consumer credit regulation. He said, "The Federal Reserve Board has been cruel and, in fact, mean in the administration of this Regulation W." Paul Brown (D Ga.)

said the Banking and Currency Committee had liberalized Regulation W so that past hardships would no longer exist. He argued that some control was needed as an anti-inflation measure. The Patman amendment lost on voice vote.

Patman then obtained a favorable standing vote, 140-43, on an amendment to extend the payment period on new automobiles from the existing 15 to 21 months. The Committee had set the figure at 18 months.

An amendment by McDonough to give communities pocket veto power over emergency defense rent-control orders was approved on teller vote, 160-140. There was no debate.

An amendment by Frank T. Bow (R Ohio) to exempt from regulation under the Act any natural gas company regulated by a state was approved on voice vote without debate.

Showdown on Provisions

The House then went on to reverse or confirm tentative decisions made previously on major amendments. The amendments first had been accepted on non-record votes when the House was sitting as the Committee of the Whole. Members demanded roll-call votes on these amendments when the legislators later resumed the formal status of the House of Representatives. (For voting, see p. 536.)

Most of the amendments which received separate roll-call votes were opposed by the Truman Administration. Rated as Truman victories were the final decisions on three amendments:

1. W. R. Poage (D Tex.) — Albert M. Cole (R Kan.) amendment to put all price control on a "cost-plus" basis. Defeated 181-233. Democrats opposed the amendment 68-154; Republicans supported it 113-78.

2. James C. Davis (D Ga.) amendment to put a four-month freeze on wages, prices and rents. Defeated 164-251. Democrats opposed it 7-216; Republicans favored it 156-35.

3. Cole amendment to ban meat ceiling prices which did not allow reasonable margins of profit for each segment of the processing industry on each species of livestock. Beaten 166-249. Democrats voted against the amendment 38-184; Republicans voted for it 128-64.

"Coalition" Victories

On seven major amendments, the Republican-Southern Democrats coalition rolled over Administration opposition. The coalition claimed victories on:

1. August H. Andresen (R Minn.) amendment to extend and broaden import controls on fats, edible oils, and rice, and add import controls for dairy products and peanuts. The amendment was confirmed 266-147. Democrats opposed it 101-119; Republicans approved it 165-27.

2. Clifford R. Hope (R Kan.) amendment to prohibit slaughtering quotas on meat processors. Both supporters and opponents of this amendment said they were acting to block black markets. The original approval was confirmed 249-167. Democrats voted against the amendment 93-130; Republicans voted for it 156-36.

3. Jesse P. Wolcott (R Mich.) amendment to deny the President the authority to acquire and operate defense plants. Final vote was 233-184; with Democrats opposing the amendment 42-181 and Republicans supporting it 191-2.

4. Porter Hardy, Jr. (D Va.) amendment to strike from the bill authority for the President to set up new government corporations to carry out provisions of the bill. The amendment carried 250-167. Democrats opposed it 60-163; Republicans voted for it 190-3.

5. A Banking and Currency Committee amendment to the bill to prohibit ceilings on farm commodities below 90 per cent of the May 19, 1951, price to producers. The amendment was designed as a block to announced future rollbacks in beef prices. The House gave final approval to the amendment 234-183. Democrats opposed it 110-113; Republicans supported it 124-69.

6. Committee amendment to delete authority to enforce price controls by licensing or refusing to license businesses covered by the Act. The ban was confirmed 334-81. Democrats favored the ban 142-80; Republicans did likewise, 191-1.

7. Committee amendment to delete authority to put special controls on commodity exchange speculation. The amendment carried 242-172. Democrats opposed the ban 90-133; Republicans favored it 152-38.

In all, separate House roll-call votes were demanded on 12 amendments which had been adopted in Committee of the Whole. All others were agreed to en bloc.

Move to Recommit

Early July 21, after the last amendment was disposed of, Albert M. Cole (R Kan.) moved to send the entire measure back to the Banking and Currency Committee — a move designed to kill the bill. This was voted down, 117-299. Democrats voted against the recommittal motion 32-191; Republicans opposed it 85-107.

At the end of a 14-hour session, at 1:20 a.m. July 21, the House approved the bill. The final vote was 323-92, with Democrats voting for the measure 206-16 and Republicans supporting it 116-76.

For major provisions of the bill as finally approved, see Provision section, p. 438.)

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

August H. Andresen (R Minn.) — Extend import controls on fats and edible oils (except coconuts and coconut products), peanuts, dairy products, rice and rice products to June 30, 1953, and prohibit any import of such products which would impair or reduce domestic production or result in any unnecessary expenditure under government price-support program. Voice vote; roll-call vote, 266-147.

Jesse P. Wolcott (R Mich.) — Prevent the President from making any exceptions to the anti-hoarding order on materials written into the original Defense Production Act. First rejected on standing vote 80-86. Wolcott demanded a teller vote, and the amendment then was agreed to 126-111.

Clifford R. Hope (R Kan.) — Prohibit any restriction on the quantity of livestock which may be slaughtered or processed. Teller, 200-112; roll-call, 249-167.

Wolcott — Remove from the controls bill authority for the President to acquire and operate defense plants. Teller, 159-139, roll-call, 233-184.

Jacob K. Javits (R N. Y.) — Make the plant-acquiring authority for the President subject to certification by the Defense Production Administration. Voice. (This was set aside following adoption of the Wolcott amendment, above).

Harold D. Cooley (D N.C.) — Remove from the controls bill a provision for the payment of subsidies on farm products. Voice.

Porter Hardy, Jr. (D Va.) — Eliminate authority for the President to create new government corporations. Standing 92-39; roll call, 250-167.

Wesley A. D'Ewart (R Mont.) — Terminate contracts for the purchase of farm commodities one year after expiration of the act. Voice.

Ralph A. Gamble (R N.Y.) — Exempt wages paid for certain professional services from stabilization regulations. Voice.

Thomas G. Abernethy (D Miss.) — Eliminate freeze for parity for either a marketing year, a season, or a calendar year. Voice.

Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.) — Authorize Indiana retailers to increase ceiling prices to cover their gross income tax. Voice.

A. S. Herlong, Jr. (D Fla)) — Require Price Administrator to take business costs, speculative fluctuations, and industry-wide profits into consideration in fixing ceilings. Voice.

John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) — Allow imposition of price ceilings on unregulated common carriers and public utilities. Voice.

John W. Byrnes (R Wis.) — Allow increases in postal rates to be passed on to buyers of mail order merchandise. Voice.

Hope — Provide that nothing in the controls bill would repeal or affect any provision of the Agricultural Act of 1949. Voice.

Herlong — Prohibit ceilings which deny a retailer or wholesaler his customary percentage margin of profit; provide a system for exceptions in cases of items in short supply. Voice.

Frank T. Bow (R Ohio) — Prohibit the application of natural gas regulations issued under the Act to any state with a public regulation agency already authorized to restrict the use of natural gas. Voice.

Committee amendment — Delete authority to control commodity speculation. Standing, 92-52; Roll call, 242-172.

Wright Patman (D Tex.) — Substitute 21 month for 18 month limitation on automobile installment buying. Standing, 140-43.

E. L. Forrester (D Ga.) — Provide that down-payments on installment buying may be made by trade-in or exchange of property, as well as by cash. Voice.

Albert P. Morano (R Conn.) — Require down-payment on roofing or siding repairs, alterations, or building improvements in advance of completion. Voice.

Winfield K. Denton (D Ind.) — Relax regulation X so that not more than 10 per cent of the purchase price of a home under $10,000 would be required and the purchaser would be given 25 years to make payments. Standing, 85-70.

Abraham J. Multer (D N.Y.) — Delete provision for business advisory committees to appoint, at their own expense, a secretary or counsel who may attend committee meetings, but not vote. Standing, 91-8.

Wolcott — Provide that, in the allocation of materials, due regard be given to current competitive situation of established businesses. Voice.

Patman — Provide that the Small Defense Plant Corporation not be affiliated with or be within any other federal agency or department. Voice.

Gordon L. McDonough (R Calif.) — Provide that maximum rentals in critical defense areas shall be set with due consideration to rents prevailing at time controls are established. Standing, 119-103; teller, 161-140.

Eugene J. Keogh (D N.Y.) — Provide that any parent of an armed forces member who died in action since September 16, 1940, should be considered a member of a World War II veterans' family. Standing, 181-4.

McDonough — Provide that application of rent control in critical defense areas shall be determined by local governing body which previously decontrolled the area, except for housing accommodations of families of servicemen. Teller, 160-140.

Lansdale G. Sasscer (D Md.) — Allow a 20 per cent increase over January 30, 1942, rentals at Greenbelt, Md., housing project. Standing, 103-7.

Brent Spence (D Ky.) — Change effective date of new rent control law from June 30, 1951, to July 30, 1951. Voice.

Committee amendment — Preserve existing 10 per cent beef price rollback and prohibit further rollbacks on agricultural commodities. Standing, 183-90; teller, 207-123; Roll call 234-183.

Committee amendment — Delete power to license certain businesses. Standing, 127-27; roll call, 334-81.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Jesse P. Wolcott (R Mich.) — Declare it the intention of Congress that direct controls should not be used "unless and until" indirect controls had been exhausted. The meaning of the amendment was changed by acceptance on teller vote, 151-147, of a Christian A. Herter (R Mass.) amendment to take out the word "until." However, the amended Wolcott proposal was rejected. Teller vote, 149-169.

Charles J. Kersten (R Wis.) — Amend the Wolcott amendment so direct controls could be used only when indirect controls also would be in effect. (This would have had about the same effect as the Herter amendment.) Voice.

Albert M. Cole (R Kan.) — Provide that no ceiling price be set on processed meat products without insuring a fair profit to all segments of the livestock industry as a group and on each species of livestock. Approved by standing vote, 126-96, and by teller, 160-144; rejected, roll call, 166-249.

W. R. Poage (D Tex.) — (as amended by Cole) — Establish a ceiling-price formula which would include all direct and indirect costs, including parity, and allow profit not less than 85 per cent of average profit during three most profitable years, 1946 to 1949 inclusive. Agreed to by teller vote, 116-102; rejected, roll call, 181-233.

Cole (R Kan.) — Extend Poage amendment to all commodity ceiling prices. (Agreed to by standing vote, 96-53, but Poage amendment later was rejected on roll call.)

James C. Davis (D Ga.) — Freeze all prices, wages, salaries and other compensation at level of July 7, 1951, for four months, except for agricultural products selling below parity. Agreed to by standing vote, 180-151; rejected, roll call, 172-243.

Wesley A. D'Ewart (R Mont.) — Exempt strategic and critical metals and minerals from ceilings when such materials cannot be economically produced because of the marginal or submarginal character of the source, or necessity of installing additional facilities or equipment. Agreed to by standing vote, 121-80, and by teller, 138-101; rejected, roll call, 200-216.

Glenn R. Davis (R Wis.) — Establish a single central government agency as claimant for construction and supply needs of state and local governments and their tax-supported agencies. Agreed to, voice vote; rejected, roll call, 164-251.

Abraham J. Multer (D N.Y.) — To make the Andresen prohibition on imports (see Amendments Accepted) discretionary with the President. Voice.

Brent Spence (D Ky.) — Extend the existing import controls on fats and oil until Sept. 30, 1952. Standing 65-136.

Wright Patman (D Tex.) — Extend the fats and oils import controls until July 1, 1952. This was a substitute for the Spence amendment. Division, 61-129. July 10.

Albert Rains (D Ala.) — Allow no new plants or plant additions to be constructed with government assistance unless the location utilized fully the national resources, dispersed production for national security, and minimized further concentrations of population in areas short of housing facilities. Rains introduced his amendment when a similar committee amendment was ruled out of order. Standing, 79-134.

Multer—Amend the Rains proposal by making the plant dispersal permissive instead of mandatory and by limiting its application to government plants, thus excluding private plants getting government loans. Voice.

James G. Donovan (D N.Y.) — Establish a Federal Minerals Administration, in the Department of Interior, having exclusive power and jurisdiction over the mineral program, exclusive of oil, coal, and natural gas. Standing, 59-95. (Three modifications to the Donovan amendment previously were agreed to by voice vote: James S. Golden (R Ky.), excluding coal and oil; John J. Dempsey (D N.M.), making the minerals administration a subordinate agency under Department of Interior; and Oren Harris (D Ark.), excluding natural gas.)

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) — Authorize the President to acquire plants and facilities to manufacture certain materials vital to defense, when certified as necessary by the Director of Defense Mobilization, but prohibit their being marketed by the government. Standing, 59-105, again rejected, teller, 90-121.

Wolcott — Retain beef price rollback then in effect but prohibit all other rollbacks on agricultural commodities and on most non-agricultural commodities; provide a cost formula for price ceilings. Standing, 65-129.

Harold D. Cooley (D N.C.) — Cancel the 10 per cent beef price rollback and prevent further rollbacks affecting farm commodities. Standing, 109-163; teller, 124-217.

E. E. Cox (D Ga.) — Extend Cooley amendment to prevent any rollbacks in industrial materials or services. Standing, 89-147.

Henry O. Talle (R Iowa) — Require approval of the Secretary of Agriculture on price regulations applying to farm commodities. Standing, 61-87.

Kersten — Limit power of the Wage Stabilization Board to formulating general wage and salary stabilization policies and regulations and to advisory capacity of interpreting such policies in individual cases. Standing, 135-140; teller, 152-190.

Wingate H. Lucas (D Tex.) — Limit the Board's powers (like the Kersten amendment); provide that public membership on board exceed combined labor and industry membership and include at least one labor member not affiliated with AFL or CIO. Standing, 135-140; teller, 113-217.

Chet Holifield (D Calif.) — Amend Davis "freeze" amendment to include farm commodities. Voice.

John E. Fogarty (D R.I.) — Substitute for Davis amendment to rollback all prices and wages to Sept. 8 1950, levels. Voice, Glenn R. Davis (R Wis.) — Amend committee amendment (which was agreed to), to remove from price ceilings materials and services sold by state and local governments and other tax-supported agencies. Standing, 47-92.

William B. Widnall (R N.J.) — Empower the Emergency Court of Appeals to issue a temporary restraining order or interlocutory decree staying the effectiveness of a price regulation when the regulation "shows on its face it was issued contrary to prohibitions" under the law and where it would be necessary for the court to act at once to prevent irreparable damage. Voice.

Cox — Exempt bowling alleys from price control. Voice.

Clare E. Hoffman (R Mich.) — Prohibit any restrictions on individuals raising or slaughtering their own livestock and poultry for home consumption, Voice.

Howard H. Buffett (R Neb.) — Provide that all price ceilings established in the past or future be adjusted to compensate employers for approved wage increases. Voice.

Cooley — Prohibit price ceilings on tobacco when acreage allotments and marketing quotas were in effect. Standing, 50-103.

Javits — Eliminate "parity" as the standard to determine ceiling prices on agricultural commodities. Voice.

W. R. Poage (D Tex.) — Permit decontrol when the price of a commodity has remained two per cent below the ceiling price for a 60 day period. Voice.

Lucas — Require that labor membership on the Wage Stabilization Board include at least one labor member not affiliated with AFL or CIO. Standing, 42-60.

William H. Bates (R Mass.) — Permit the President to make necessary adjustments in price and wage ceilings so as to correct hardships or inequities. Voice.

Samuel W. Yorty (D Calif.) — Provide that a four-month "freeze" on prices and wages at July 7 levels as covered in the Davis amendment include farm commodities selling below parity. Voice.

James C. Davis (D Ga.) — Provide that penalties for violations of Wage Stabilization regulations before June 30, 1951, be invoked only if violation was intentional, and that such violations be subject to judicial review. Standing, 59-64, teller, 101-102.

Ralph A. Gamble (R N.Y.) — Prohibit the OPS from issuing orders of the maximum average price type. Standing, 50-78.

Hoffman — Make it unlawful, effective 10 days after enactment, for any person to charge or pay more than the "fair average price" for any commodity or service; and provide for enforcement by state and local officials. Voice.

Spence — Prevent agricultural import restrictions, not necessary to enforce allocation measures, which might adversely affect the U.S. agricultural export trade. Standing, 106-143.

Multer — Permit World War II veterans who have not previously received a housing loan to qualify for a guaranteed housing loan up to $7,500. Standing, 106-126.

Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) — Exempt functions under the controls bill from provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act. Voice.

Multer — Authorize the President to exercise any and all credit controls, including but not limited to consumer credit and real estate credit controls. Voice.

Patman — Abolish consumer credit control regulation W. Voice.

Multer — Relax regulation W requirements on loans under $500 for purchases other than such items as automobiles and television. Voice.

L. Mendel Rivers (D S.C.) — Modify regulation W to require one-fourth instead of one-third down-payment on automobiles, and 10 instead of 15 per cent on television and similar items. Standing, 46-147.

Boyd Tackett (D Ark.) -- Relax regulation W requirements on loans made under $500, or those made to armed forces members or displaced defense plant employees. Initially agreed to, standing, 83-53. Tackett later said he had misrepresented this amendment and asked for reconsideration, without the exemption for armed forces members and defense plant employees. Then, at the request of Jesse P. Wolcott (R Mich.), the Tackett amendment was vacated by unanimous consent. Tackett then substituted an amendment exempting all loans under $500. Rejected, voice vote.

Albert M. Cole (R Kan.) — Provide that price and wage stabilization control authority terminate August 15, 1951. Standing, 28-147.

Isidore Dollinger (D N.Y.) — Delete the 20 per cent increase in rent under controls. Standing, 43-44.

John Bell Williams (D Miss.) — Authorize the President to prohibit certain speculative or manipulative practices which he judges "inconsistent" with purposes of rent control. Standing, 46-97.

Cole (R Kan.) — Suspend regulation X in areas under rent control. Standing, 107-135.

Adolph J. Sabath (D Ill.) — Delete provision limiting rent control to cities of less than 2,500,000 population under 1940 census. Standing, 97-145; teller, 127-145.

John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) — Substitute 10 per cent for 20 per cent increase over June 30, 1947 rentals. Voice.

Multer — Provide for a four-month freeze at July 7 level on all rentals. Rejected, 53-131.

Banking Committee amendment — Prohibit the importation of articles or commodities made from raw materials in short supply in the U.S., unless the articles were necessary for national defense. Standing, 77-96.

MOTION REJECTED

Clare E. Hoffman (R Mich.) — Motion to recommit the bill to the House Banking and Currency Committee, with directions to report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken. Standing 3-71.

CONFERENCE

A joint conference of House and Senate representatives July 25 began ironing out diferences between the two versions of the bill. The result was a rewritten combination of House and Senate provisions.

The defense housing section of the Senate bill and some housing credit provisions from both bills were dropped. Conferees agreed to ask members in both houses to consider similar provisions in a separate defense housing bill.

Work on the bill was finished July 27. (For final provisions, see Provisions section, p.438.)

Senate

The Senate acted immediately after the conference report was filed the afternon of July 27. Chairman Maybank of the Banking and Currency Committee explained the conference bill to the Senate.

"There are a number of provisions which I believe could be greatly strengthened," Maybank said, "but all in all I think we got the best anti-inflation and production control bill possible."

No Senator spoke against the extension bill, although Maybank was questioned closely on several controversial provisions.

The Senate gave final approval to the bill on voice vote.

House

The House took up the conference bill July 30. Chairman Spence of the Banking and Currency Committee recommended approval of the measure, saying, "If you vote down this conference report, you are going to destroy the Defense Production Act; because it expires tomorrow night and there will be no authority anywhere to control prices, wages or rents."

Spence said he did not think the bill would effectively control prices.

"It is a sellers' bill," he said, "but I don't think we can get any better bill than this."

Jesse P. Wolcott (R Mich.) told the House:

"The conference report gives the President all of the authority needed to control prices and prevent prices from getting wholly out of alignment if it is judiciously administered."

"We deleted in the House, in the Senate and in the conference," he added, "almost all of the powers asked for which might have resulted in the change of the very form of the American government."

After brief discussion of the measure, the House approved it on roll-call vote, 294-80. Most members of both parties supported the bill, Democrats 180-18; Republicans 113-62. The one independent voted for the bill.

The bill then went to the White House. The President signed it July 31, after criticising it as a weak bill. It became Public Law 96.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

President Truman said in his message July 31, that he had "reluctantly" signed the amended controls bill in order to save the defense program from expiration.

Assailing the new law (Public Law 96) as the kind that would "push prices up" and "threaten the stability of our economy," Truman declared he would have vetoed the measure if it had contained only inflation control provisions. He declared that, with such "gravely deficient" controls, the government would be unable to prevent inflation until Congress "repairs the damage it has done by this act"

At the same time, Truman pointed out that the new law had made little change in emergency defense powers relating to production and materials controls. He said the production and rent control sections were "relatively adequate", and that such governmental powers as aids to small business had been "strengthened to some extent."

The principal effects of the price control provisions, the President said, would be to raise ceiling prices for the "manufacturer, the wholesaler, and the retailer", and to roll price ceilings forward from their present level "up to heights we cannot yet foresee". He said, furthermore, the law would "greatly increase and complicate the administrative difficulties of price control."

Singles Out Amendments

President Truman's message was particularly criticial of two Republican-sponsored amendments, one eliminating beef slaughtering quotas, sponsored by Sen. Hugh Butler (R Neb.) and Rep. Clifford R. Hope (R Kan.), and the other guaranteeing pre-Korea percentage margins of profits to wholesalers and retailers, by Sen. Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.). Truman said the Butler-Hope amendment would encourage the return of black markets, and the Capehart amendment would "force price ceilings up on thousands of commodities, clear across the board"

Because of the "complicated and vague" aspects of the inflationary controls provisions, Truman said, it was not yet possible to "estimate fully all of its effects on present price ceilings and on the administration of price control." He promised, however, when the executive agencies finished their detailed analysis of the law's application, to submit to Congress point-by-point recommendations of how to revise and strengthen the law "to give us the tools we need to fight inflation."

The President again asked for revision in a message Aug. 23 directed principally at the beef slaughtering and profit margin provisions. Three Republicans, Homer Ferguson (Mich.), Richard M. Nixon (Calif.) and Herman Welker (Idaho) quickly introduced a bill (S 2048) which they said would eliminate provisions to which Mr. Truman had objected. Before the law had been in effect a month, hearings were in progress on the proposal to revise it. (See page 462.)

PRESSURE ON CONTROLS

Summary — During the long Congressional fight over controls, scores of national organizations turned their power and influence on Congress in effort to help shape the pending bills. Many organizations sent representatives to testify in the committee hearings. (See Committee sections, pp. 440 446)

Other groups mailed or carried their arguments to individual Congressmen. Many took their cases to the public in an attempt to pressure Congress indirectly.

Almost none of the pressure groups took a simple stand for or against the bill. They favored some parts of the complex, omnibus controls measures and they opposed or asked for modifications of others. They also presented their own programs of anti-inflation action.

Most pressure was in opposition to the Administration program. Despite last minute attempts by the President and his controls administrators to stir up "consumer" interest in his controls program, Congressmen heard from few pro-controls groups or individuals.

Industry, labor, and farm group spokesmen agreed that price advances should be halted. But they disagreed about how to halt that inflationary process. In general, groups blamed "the other fellow" for inflation.

Industry Theory

Industry spokesmen emphasized what they called "fundamental" measures for coping with rising prices. They called for tax policies which would drain from the consumer enough disposable income to keep effective demand down to the available supply of civilian - type consumer goods. They called for fiscal and credit policies on the part of the federal government which would help curb civilian buying and expansion of lower-priority industrial activity. They called for encouragement of increased production in vital industries.

Direct price controls, they said, were burdensome and unnecessary, or relatively unimportant and preferably temporary. They said price controls should be tied to wage controls.

Labor Theory

Labor unions called for increased production in vital industries, use of taxes to sop up inflationary forces and appropriate fiscal and credit measures. But they wanted these methods applied differently, with their weight distributed elsewhere than proposed by industry.

The unions argued that it was wrong to try to peg wages in an industry — or in all industry — at a current level at the same time that the selling prices of the products were pegged at current level, because, they said, the workers' cost of living would be pegged to unfrozen prices in other industries.

The unions claimed that the price freeze was a fraud because that law banned any ceiling on food prices which would not allow parity to the farmer and certain profits to processors.

They proposed that subsidies be paid to the farmer to bring the farmer's income up while keeping the price of his product steady.

Farm Theory

The major farm organizations did not all agree on a number of points. But many of them fought against farm commodity price control. Five of the most important farm groups announced against any amendment of the Defense Production Act which would permit food price control at less than parity. And most of them did not approve of a proposed federal subsidy designed to permit food price control below parity while giving the farmer an income equivalent to parity by supplementing farm marketing receipts with government checks.

Labor Unions

Spokesman for most major labor union confederations during the controls battle was the United Labor Policy Committee. The ULPC at that time had linked these groups for the first time since the CIO was born. Taking part were the American Federation of Labor, Congress of Industrial Organizations, and the Railway Labor Executives Association.

The ULPC, speaking for the participating unions, said that prices had increased much more than wages, that profiteering had been increasingly great, and that while taxes on the wage earner were at wartime levels, those on corporations were lower.

The labor unions claimed that while wages were being controlled rigidly, prices were being permitted to continue upward. They called price controls fraudulent, arguing that consumers not only had no way of knowing what any merchant's ceilings were but even after paying inflated prices got less quality and quantity. Price control by control of percentage of mark-up margins was under heaviest labor attack, especially since the retailer did his own computing and ceilings were not posted.

Spokesmen for the individual unions also supplied pressure for or against specific phases of the controls program. They flooded Congressional offices with their publications.

UAW - CIO's magazine "Ammunition," in February, said "The freeze is a fraud." It explained, "Under the Defense Production Act, the important prices cannot be frozen," and listed rents and food commodity prices which were below parity. It said there were three more "gimmicks" in the law that prevented price freezing. These were the ban on cutting some middle man's margins, a virtual ban on quality control, and what it called encouragement to discontinue manufacture of low and middle-price articles.

"The Packinghouse Worker," monthly newspaper of the CIO United Packinghouse Workers of America, said that "the recent squabble as to whether the Office of Price Stabilization or the Justice Department should control civil litigation enforcing price controls is a real clue to the sham nature of the controls. Even if the Justice Department wanted to enforce the controls, it could not do so adequately. Enforcement. . .cannot be divorced from the agency which sets and administers them. . ."

Mine Workers

United Mine Workers of America (independent and not in ULPC) did not believe the existing law permitted effective price control. UMW's "Journal" said that the OPS margin regulation further weakened price control machinery already ineffective because of legal exemption from control accorded farm commodity prices under parity.

"The Progressive Miner," organ of the Progressive Mine Workers of America (independent) commenting on the rollback on auto prices ordered late in 1950, said that was all right, "but what happened to the common guy, the man who isn't going to buy a car but has two or three or four or more kids and a wife to support. . .Did you hear the government ordering rollback of prices on butter, eggs, milk or bread?"

Union papers carried numerous stories specifically pinning the blame for high food prices on the food processors and distributors and exempting the farmer.

The International Association of Machinists (AFL), "Machinist," in an open letter to Mobilization Director Charles E. Wilson summed up the labor complaint under six points:

High and increasing cost of living, an expiring rent-control law, strict wage controls, an "obviously unfair" tax program being considered by Congress, the "wrecking" of the Labor Department, and the "almost exclusively" businessman-manned mobilization program "run with an eye toward producing the maximum profit."

Under the cost-of-living heading, "The Machinist" said that price control rules permitted storekeepers "to write their own ceilings based on their own records. They can raise their prices whenever the cost of the goods they buy goes up. No ceiling prices are posted in the stores for us to check. There is no effective provision to protect us against cheapening of quality and shrinking the size of the packages."

CIO Proposals

Emil Rieve, administrative chairman of the CIO Committee on Economic Policy, presented the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report with a general mobilization and stabilization program, along lines suggested generally by labor spokesmen. Rieve requested:

1. Food subsidies to permit effective controls over retail food prices while assuring fair returns to farmers.
2. Authorization to regulate trading and margins on the commodity exchanges.
3. Effective grade labeling, setting of specifications and standards for different kinds of goods and services, and placing quantity ceilings on highest-priced items made and sold.
4. Increased limit on total outstanding loans to businesses for expansion and grant of power to the government to build and operate plants when needed for the defense effort.

Other points called for integration of the National Production Authority's production function with the price stabilization system so that materials allocations and priorities could be used to further price control; for rationing of basic items such as food and clothing if in shortage; passage of a new rent control law with provision for recontrol of decontrolled areas; taxes bearing on those with the highest incomes and on corporations.

Rieve opposed credit restrictions on purchase of homes, autos and household appliances, which "tend to force low-income buyers out of the market, while allowing those with ample cash reserves to buy as much as they choose." He favored empowering the Federal Reserve Board to impose special reserve requirements on banks to curb any further expansion of bank credit.

Labor Participation

In the execution of controls, labor not only wanted representation at the overall top policy level but also at policy levels in specific fields.

For example, the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen Of North America (AFL) and the United Packinghouse Workers of America (CIO) jointly demanded participation at policy-making levels on meat price control conferences "so that the voice of the working and consuming public may be heard." (The two unions claimed to represent between them more than 90 per cent of the workers in the meat industry.)

Farm Group Stands

Farm Bureau

The American Farm Bureau Federation opposed price and wage controls entirely, holding that they "strike at symptoms and not at fundamental causes."

AFBF called for inflation-control measures along these lines, instead of a price-wage-subsidy program:

1. A balanced, pay-as-we-go federal budget, with elimination of non-essential items. This included cutting the President's budget item for the 1952 farm conservation program from $285 to $150 million.
2. "Substantially heavier taxes," — $4 billion more from personal income taxes; an increase from 47 to 55 per cent in combined corporate normal and surtax rate; a cut from $1,000 to $500 in the maximum unitemized standard deduction in personal income tax; and temporary heavy excise taxes on luxury goods and those strategic goods in short supply.
3. Federal Reserve system should relate its government bond-buying-and-selling program to national need for tighter credit. Supply of money and credit should be cut, AFBF said.
4. There should be some inventory control but no consumer rationing, and efforts made to encourage voluntary increase in personal savings. Increased taxes are preferred to forced savings, according to AFBF.

National Grange

The National Grange recommended last-resort use only of price, wage, and rationing controls.

Its executive committee recommended "strict government economy in all departments not materially and directly furthering the defense effort . . ." controls to "channel credit into expansion of our production facilities . . .(and to) restrict borrowing for non - essential purposes," and increased taxes to finance the defense effort as far as practicable on pay-as-we-go basis, and to drain off "excess" buying power. The tax program must preserve opportunity and the chance to expand and promote efficiency, the Grange said.

Only when these measures proved inadquate to bring buying power and supplies of goods and services into balance should price, wage, and rationing controls be used, said the Grange, adding that if used they should be used together, not separately.

The Grange joined other farm groups in opposition to amendment of the Defense Production Act to permit food price control at less than parity, saying that parity is a fair price device and "no amount of government controls" can make succeed an effort to freeze unfairly the return to "any sizeable segment of our economy."

And the Grange opposed the use of subsidies as a means of achieving parity of income to the farmer and lower food prices to the consumer.

Farmers Union

National Farmers Union opposed freezing prices of farm commodities which are below parity. The NFU, unlike the Farm Bureau, Grange and other farm bodies, asked for subsidies.

The NFU listed "three major dangers" confronting farmers, especially the family-type agriculture, in the mobilization period: The "all-out attack on parity"; "failure of Selective Service to be 'selective' and protect essential manpower in agriculture"; and unfair allocation of critical materials for farm machinery, repair parts, REA, rural phones, fencing, bale ties, etc.

National Council

National Council of Farmer Cooperatives rejected the contention that blame for mounting food prices belonged to the farmer. John H. Davis, executive secretary of NCFC, said while some farm commodity prices rose after the Korean War outbreak, non-farm prices also rose. Because farm commodity prices lagged below prices of what the farmer buys, farmer net income was at a four-year low, he said.

While this was happening to farm operators, he said average hourly factory wages had climbed since 1947, and corporate profits after taxes reached a record high.

Charles W. Holman, National Milk Producers Federation secretary, told consumers that food scarcities and rationing would follow "any pricing program that does not permit and encourage full production," and that consumers could not expect prices bringing less than fair returns to farmers.

Holman said that farm subsidies would not be needed if price, wage, and credit controls and materials allocations were skillfully used. Subsidies to farmers "would be an admission that inefficient use of controls had throttled an abundance of supplies by maladjusted price ceilings," he said. He added that subsidies fooled the consumer on food prices made farmer politically subservient to the government, added to the tax burden, and increased inflationary spending power.

The Dairymen's League Co-operative Association recommended:

1. Reduction of non-essential consumer goods and services.
2. Enlistment of farm leaders by government planners.
3. Placement of farm leaders in allotment control posts.
4. Abandonment of the subsidy idea. But, if government insists on subsidies, pay them to the "real beneficiaries, the consumers," not to the farmers, so that the consumers will know that it is they who are being helped by the government.

Butter Institute

American Butter Institute, Inc., sent Congress a two-point appeal:

1. Asked delay as long as possible for mandatory price controls or actual dollars-and-cents ceilings on butter. If and when ceilings are needed, ABI continued, butter and other dairy products should be priced under ceilings fully competitive with meat and all other farm products.

2. Asked for an early announced policy by Congress or the Economic Stabilization Agency that subsidies would not be used.

On Meat Controls

Organizations of livestock producers, packers, middlemen, and others in the meat industry struggled against meat price control.

In January, 21 of these groups wired Defense Mobilizer Wilson, Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston, and Price Stabilizer Michael V. DiSalle their views. They said they knew meat prices had to be stabilized, but they believe this could not be done by "direct controls, price ceilings, rationing or subsidies."

They argued instead of increased livestock production (which they said would occur if no controls hampered it), a pay-as-you-go tax policy, and a "sound" fiscal and monetary policy.

The 21 groups which signed these telegrams were:

American Farm Bureau Federation.
Iowa Farm Bureau Federation.
Missouri Farm Bureau Federation.
Illinois Agricultural Association.
National Wool Growers Association.
National Lamb Feeders Association.
National Live Stock Producers Association.
American National Cattlemen's Association.
National Society of Purebred Record Association.
National Beef Breeds Association.
Joint Live Stock Committee.
Kansas Livestock Association.
Central Livestock Association, Inc.
Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers' Association.
Independent Livestock Marketing Association.
National Livestock Exchange.
National Committee of Order Buyers & Dealers.
American Stock Yards Association.
American Meat Institute.
Western States Meat Packers Association.
National Association of Retail Grocers.

Livestock Conference

A 14 - organization bloc, the Livestock Conference Group, sent Congressmen a statement saying that "the record during the last war showed clearly that price controls on meat were a failure, that they were a barrier to the success of the program to increase meat production as a war necessity, that they drove meat out of the normal channels of trade and forced many consumers to buy in the black market, at prices far above ceiling prices."

The member organizations in the Livestock Conference Group:

American Farm Bureau Federation.
American Meat Institute.
American National Live Stock Association.
Central Livestock Association.
Corn Belt Livestock Feeders Association.

XUM

Joint Livestock Committee.
Kansas Livestock Association.
Missouri Livestock Association.
National Association of Farmer Co-operatives.
National Lamb Feeders Association.
National Live Stock Producers Association.
National Wool Growers Association.
Texas & Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association.
Texas Sheep and Goat Raisers Association.

Meat Retailers, Slaughterers

The Metropolitan Slaughterers Association, N.Y.C., took advertising space Feb. 26 in New York City papers to complain that the Jan. 25 price freeze on retail and wholesale meat prices did not also control prices of live cattle, calves and lambs. "How can the consumer be spared a further hike in the cost of living if the price freeze does not start at the true source — the live animal — but begins after the livestock has been sold at an uncontrolled price!. . .It's up to you, Mr. and Mrs. Consumer. . . Should livestock prices be controlled? The answer is definitely 'Yes'! Write, wire or send this to your Congressman today!"

The National Association of Retail Meat and Food Dealers, adopted a resolution which it sent to Congress, saying that meat control in World War II had been inequitable, unworkable and unjust in many cases because regulations were "loosely and hastily drawn." NARMFD demanded that, when legislation or regulations were formulated, enforcement be handled differently.

Business Stands

Chamber of Commerce

The Chamber of Commerce of the U.S., in an "emergency policy" adopted by its director, opposed payment of generalized federal subsidies on any farm product. The Chamber said that subsidies were inflationary, inconsistent with the pay-as-we-go policy, difficult to discontinue, and created serious reactions when they ended and prices again reflected true market values.

Grocery Manufacturers

Paul S. Willis, president of the Grocery Manufacturers of America, said in literature sent to Congressmen that "it serves no purpose to shift the responsibility of causes for rising prices, and it is a false hope to expect the government to do the job alone to take care of us."

But, he said, the government should do the following:

1. Reduce all non-essential expenditures.
2. Tighten credit controls.
3. Impose appropriate taxes.
4. Set up adequately-staffed agencies for handling food problems and develop a plan whereby all government and military agencies co-operate in their food-buying to avoid bidding up prices

NAM Resolutions

The National Association of Manufacturers board of directors Feb. 20-21 adopted a series of resolutions dealing with aspects of the mobilization program.

NAM said mobilization aims could be achieved by a "program involving among other things the expansion of productive facilities by industry and the use of indirect controls rather than direct controls which proved to be ineffective in controlling inflation during World War II."

The NAM listed four main lines of policy it favored:

1. "Priorities and allocations should be used only to assure the steady flow of materials needed for the defense program."
2. Pay-as-we-go — taxes to cover all government costs, military and others. Cut non-defense government expenditures to a minimum and scrutinize defense outlays.
3. "Taxes imposed to cover expenditures must curtail spending, not curtail savings and investments. . .This means that the program must be financed largely through broadly based consumption taxes. . ."
4. Use both specific and general controls to keep credit from expanding, either through public or private sources. Federal Reserve System must take charge of the money and credit system and use the interest rate and other powers to restrict credit to loans which would not feed inflation.

NAM said that, if the decision were made to impose price and wage controls, the following should be true:

1. If price ceilings were imposed, wage controls should be invoked at the same time and on the same basis.
2. Wages should be stabilized nationally by a local labor market and/or regional approach rather than by a national ceiling. Whether on a local or national basis, wage increases should not be permitted to breach the stabilization ceiling. The term "wages" should include fringe benefits, including pensions.
3. The wage - salary stabilization board should be advisory only. Wage disputes under the policy should be settled by normal processes of collective bargaining and the Taft-Hartley Act procedures. No agency should have power to impose new pension or bonus plans. The wage board should be limited to cases concerning hourly wage earners and salaried persons receiving under $5,000 yearly; the Treasury Department should handle other cases.
4. Some other points advocated by NAM included suspension of the minimum wage determinations under the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act (which authorized the setting of higher minimum wages for firms having federal contracts than was set by the wage-hour law), retaining existing area or regional differentials in wage patterns, and rejection of wage boards for individual industries.

Chamber Views

The Chamber of Commerce of the U.S. anti-inflation program looked like this:

1. Government expenditures: Eliminate less-essential items and get full value out of dollars spent for military purposes.
2. Taxation: Pay as we go. If another $10 billion in revenue is needed, then about 60 per cent should come from excise taxes, 30 per cent from personal income taxes, and about 10 per cent from corporate income tax.
3. Credit curbs: General credit controls are better than selective credit controls. Best restrictive technique is by increasing reserve requirements, effective rediscount rates and open market operations.
4. Monetary policy: Ban forced savings. Favor flexible interest rate; back Federal Reserve side of that agency's controversy with the Treasury.
5. Price-wage controls: "If fiscal and credit measures are adequate, there should be little or no need for wage and price controls."
6. Manpower: Other shortages trace largely to manpower shortages, so make every effort to enlarge the labor supply. Lengthen the basic work week without time-and-a-half for overtime after 40 hours.
7. Wages: Do not increase wages to keep up with the cost of living. Mobilization means belt tightening; if union members partially escape it through wage adjustments, others will have that much more to take up in their belts.
8. Production: Get greater available volume of goods through increased production, tariff cuts on key items, and procurement of goods and services abroad.

Tax Foundation, Others

The Tax Foundation, Inc., N.Y.C., sent Congressmen, in its January "Tax Review", an article by Dean G. Rowland Collins and Dr. Marcus Nadler. The authors said that anti-inflation controls need not be as drastic as those of World War II and that care should be taken that they facilitate and not hamper industrial production.

The Committee for Constitutional Government, Inc. sent out literature labeling price control attempts "futile," urged instead: pay-as-we-go, getting along with cheaper food and old clothes, furniture and cars, and resisting subsidies.

The National Association of Real Estate Boards' "Headlines," Feb. 5 issue, carried an anti-control editorial by NAREB operating head Herbert U. Nelson. "The caliphs on the Potomac are bringing out OPA once more," he said. "Price control doesn't help the little fellow. . .Controls move us all towards a lower standard of living. . .Worst of all. . . is that controls establish the cult of equality. . .Scratch the skin of an equality cultist and you find a socialist. . .Socialism is in the saddle now in Washington. . ."

The Illinois Federation of Retail Associations sent Congressmen its Jan. 25 publication, which said, "Maybe we're nasty about this, but we believe the world would be better off if business flatly refused to try to carry out control orders based solely on price and with only clumsy, inefficient 'passes' at wage and raw commodity controls!"

The Property Owners Asosciation of America, in a resolution adopted Jan. 20, protested Congressional action "in forcing wage controls, price controls and rent controls on the American people in time of peace. Before an enemy has fired a single shot we are asked to renounce all of the liberties which we have enjoyed for over 150 years. . ."

Organized Retailers

Organized retailers, while cautiously watching to see what further controls would be forthcoming, generally seemed satisfied with the same controls opposed by the labor organizations.

The retailers had been pushing for percentage-of-margin-type controls, if controls were necessary.

Over one million retail stores were represented by the Retail Industry Committee and its Retail Planning Committee, which made the appeals to the Office of Price Stabilization on margins.

The retailers also asked that price control at the manufacturing level not distort, divert nor hamper the flow of goods, adding that regulations which froze dollars-and-cents prices or manufacturers' markups for very narrow classifications automatically interfered with production.

Rent Controls

While pressures on price controls and consumer credit controls made the biggest headlines and drew the most attention, organizations were concerned about many aspects of the omnibus economic controls bill. Among these were rent control and the allocations of materials.

The heavier barrage of printed and mimeographed material received by Congressmen on rent control came from its opponents. Both national associations and local groups, mostly in the real estate industry, testified or sent a stream of literature. Biggest pro-rent control bloc was organized labor.

Groups asking for strong federal rent control included the AFL, CIO, railroad brotherhoods, Americans for Democratic Action, General Federation of Women's Clubs, and American Association of Social Workers. The International Association of Machinists sent delegations from far-flung aircraft plants to Washington to tell Congress: No rental housing for aircraft workers, no planes built.

Against Rent Controls

National groups opposing federal rent control included the Chamber of Commerce of the U. S., National Association of Real Estate Boards and its Realtors' Washington Committee, National Association of Home Builders, U. S. Savings and Loan League, Mortgage Bankers Association of America, National Apartment Owners Association, Property Owners Association of America, Inc., the Association of Furnished and Unfurnished Units, Inc., and Committee for Constitutional Government, Inc.

State and local groups also had their say against federal rent control. Such groups included the Commerce and Industry Association of New York, Association of the Bar of New York City, Small Property Owners of Detroit, York (Pa.) Real Estate Board, Middlesex Apartment Owner's Association, Inc. (Boston), Home and Property Owners Alliance, Inc. (Dallas), and Nueces County Property Owners' Association (Corpus Christi, Tex.)

National Association of Buildings Owners and Managers opposed rent controls for commercial properties (office and store space), as did such groups as the Chamber, NAREB, and the Mortgage Bankers. The American Hotel Association and American Motor Hotel Association spoke against rent control for their industries.

Essentiality of Industries

Over the months many firms and industry associations experienced or anticipated difficulties in getting materials or equipment they needed, and made representations to Congress, the Administration, and the public. Common to many of these allocation appeals was the argument of essentiality: "our" industry is vital and should not be put out of business for want of materials and tools.

The Aircraft Industries Association of America publication, "Planes," in the January issue said:

"Continued access to priorities on scarce materials and parts is absolutely essential to . . . our air transport system . . . In an all-out war economy, swift transportation is an absolute essential."

The Association of American Railroads' president, William T. Faricy, in March said no more effective use of material to increase transportation can be found than using it for railroad freight cars and locomotives.

But the Trucking Industry National Defense Committee, Inc., differed. The Committee argued in full-page newspaper ads and tear-sheets sent to Congress, that motor transport was the biggest land carrier, was most efficient, and less liable to disruption by air attack than were the railways.

Automobile Champions

The Automobile Manufacturers Association sent Congressmen a pamphlet, "Automobiles and National Defense," a "short study of the essentiality of the automobile to the national economy, whether in peace or in war."

General Motors sent Congressmen reprints of a radio talk by Henry J. Taylor, under GM sponsorship, in which he stressed the essentiality of the car in the transportation network.

XUM

The National Automobile Dealers Association sent Congressmen copies of its pamphlet "Do You Need Your Car?"

The American Automobile Association legislative policy for the 82nd Congress, adopted in October, 1950, warned against repetition of World War II experience when "officials failed to realize until almost too late the great importance of private passenger cars, buses and trucks in the war effort."

The United Auto Workers (CIO) president, Walter P. Reuther, had CIO backing in his Washington battles to get reversals of agency decisions restricting flow of aluminum and other materials to the auto industry.

National Machine Tool Builders' Association sent Congressmen statements on the importance and the troubles of its industry.

The Associated General Contractors convention in February was told by AGC's managing director, H. E. Foreman, and by Ralph K. Stiles, president of the Construction Industry Manufacturers Association, that shortages of critical materials for construction equipment were hampering their industries and that the two Associations were trying to get action by the Administration.

National Association of Home Builders' Emergency Committee told the National Production Authority in June, however, that the home-building industry should not be put under the Controlled Materials Plan until channeling of materials to builders became necessary.

Farming and Food

Farm organizations, like the American Farm Bureau Federation and the National Grange, repeatedly stressed the importance of allocation of sufficient steel, copper and aluminum, to production of farm machinery. The National Barnyard Equipment Council and the Farm Equipment Institute also told Congressmen of the need to equip farmers for high food production.

The Corn Industries Research Foundation sent Congressmen a booklet listing uses of corn products for food, medical care, clothing, arms and equipment for the armed forces.

The National Confectioners' Association of the U. S., argued that, "our product is part of the living pattern of the average American and should rightfully make an important contribution to our nation's preparedness program."

The National Committee of Pet Food Canners sent Congressmen literature arguing for continued availability of tin cans for cat and dog food.

Other Industries

The contributions — and the material needs of the refrigeration and air conditioning industries were the subject of an illustrated brochure which reached Congressional mailbags. It was issued by the Air Conditioning and Refrigerating Machinery Association, Inc., with the aid of the Commercial Refrigerator Manufacturers Association and the Refrigeration Equipment Manufacturers Association.

The American Home Laundry Manufacturers' Association sent the lawmakers "Scrubboards for American Women," illustrated, which pointed out, among other things, that home laundering equipment freed women for war work and conserves clothing.

Toy Manufacturers of the U.S.A., sent a letter titled "Why Toys Are Vital to the American Way of Life."

Last Minute Push

As House debate on the Defense Production Act extension got underway, spokesmen for the Administration's economic stabilization program launched a campaign for Congressional and public backing for stronger inflation controls. Other pro-control advocates, including labor groups and the Democratic National Committee, urged voters to bombard Congressmen with pro-control mail.

Mobilization Director Wilson warned of danger of "wholesale inflation" in a broadcast July 9. In a press conference, Economic Stabilizer Johnston translated the meaning of inflation into the language of the average housewife: It could increase the cost of living per family by $1 a day, he said.

Price Administrator DiSalle served as a "grass roots" contact. On his return from the Midwest, he said he met no one who felt price controls were unnecessary.

An appeal to Democratic party leaders to shower Congress with letters and telegrams for controls was made by William M. Boyle, Jr., chairman of the Democratic National Committee.

Many labor groups urged their members to express their sentiments on controls to Congressmen. The American Federation of Labor, the Congress of Industrial Organizations, the railroad brotherhoods, through the United Labor Policy Committee, issued a "warning" that what was termed "Congressional failure" to provide adequate safeguards against inflation was "letting down our country's defenses."

The Committee, which said it represented 15,000,000 wage earners, told Congressmen they represented the American people and not "big business lobbyists" and said the votes Congressmen cast on the controls measure would be judged at the polls in 1952. The statement concluded with: "No friend of high prices can be a friend of labor."

These combined pro-controls pleas did not apparently have much effect on the flow of Congressional mail. An official of the House post office, which handled the mail to Representatives, said, "the people aren't writing any more than usual."

Some of the Rebuttal

Wilson, Johnson, and DiSalle were directly challenged in literature distributed by such opponents of direct controls as the National Association of Manufacturers and the National Live Stock Producers Association.

An editorial in the NAM News claimed that the Administration's campaign to sell the public on the need for price and wage controls had reached a "crescendo of hysteria with every device of propaganda trickery being used to convince people that facts are not as they are, but as the government spokesmen say they are."

A National Live Stock Producers Association publication contained an "answer to DiSalle's Memorandum on Beef Control Program." The reply challenged DiSalle's facts point by point and concluded that "the statements in your report can definitely be proved to be false and misleading."

Other Pro-Controls Stands

The manner in which the Congressional fight over controls continued to develop fanned the off-stage debate. Dissatisfaction with the Senate's controls-extending legislation and with the stop-gap bill apparently inspired proponents of direct controls to intensive last-minute efforts.

Among other pro-controls moves were a statement from the American Veterans Committee, a meeting of delegates of 14 national organizations with Economic Stabilizer Johnston, and an appeal by a group of prominent men.

In a letter addressed to Congressmen, the AVC expressed its "shock" at what it called Congress' failure to enact a strong Defense Production Act.

Meet With Johnston

The 14 national organizations represented at a meeting with Johnston agreed on a formal statement calling for controls to meet a situation they said had become "critical"

The groups were:

General Federation of Women's Clubs, American Legion, National Council of Jewish Women, National Council of Catholic Women, YWCA, National Congress of Parent-Teacher Associations, Cooperative League of the U.S.A., American Home Economics Association, AFL, Assembly of Women's Organizations for National Security, National Council of Negro Women, Council for Social Action of Congregational Christian Churches, National Association of Negro Business and Professional Women, and Americans for Democratic Action.

For Bipartisan Program

Eighteen educational, political and religious leaders of varying political affiliations appealed to Congress for a "bipartisan program to halt inflation." Their statement outlined a "minimum" program of economic controls, including a two-year extension of the Defense Production Act. The declaration's signers included:

Chester Bowles, former director of OPA, former Connecticut Governor, and member of the national board of Americans for Democratic Action.

Luther Youngdahl, then Governor of Minnesota, and U. S. district judge appointee in the District of Columbia.

Dr. Reinhold Niebuhr, professor of applied Christianity at Union Theological Seminary, N.Y.C. and national vice-chairman of ADA.

Barry Bingham, president of the Courier-Journal & Louisville, Ky., Times Co.

Robert R. Nathan, economist and chairman of the planning commission of the War Production Board during World War II.

Arthur M. Schlesinger, Jr., professor of history at Harvard University.

Francis Biddle, ex-U.S. Attorney General and ADA National Chairman.

Leon Henderson, economist and a former director of OPA.

Stop-Gap Controls Extension

H J Res 278 — P.L. 69

Summary—Both House and Senate approved a stop-gap extension of the Defense Production Act June 29. The Act was due to expire June 30, but passage of a resolution (H J Res 278) to extend it through July 31 kept economic controls in effect long enough for Congress to complete work on a one-year extension bill. (For action on the long-range bill, see p. 438.)

The Senate passed the one-year extension measure early in the morning of June 29 after an all-night session. House leaders, however, had decided that the House could not complete work on the measure before the June 30 deadline. Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Tex.) and Majority Leader John W. McCormack (D Mass.) announced June 27 they would seek a one-month extension of the existing law.

HOUSE

Committee

Brent Spence (D Ky.) chairman of the House Banking and Currency Committee, introduced a stop-gap measure (H J Res 278) later the same day. It would have extended the existing Defense Production Act without change and also would have extended the expiring federal rent control law and the fats and oils import control law, all through July 31.

The Banking Committee approved the resolution June 28 on a 21-3 vote.

The Rules Committee cleared the measure for floor action the same day. Under the rule voted by the Rules Committee, only amendments sponsored by the Banking Committee would be permitted from the floor, with one exception. The exception would be an amendment to ban new price ceilings during the brief life of the measure.

Floor Action

The House took up the resolution July 29. After brief discussion of controls, the House agreed by unanimous consent to permit a modification of the Rules Committee limitations so that an amendment could be offered to set price ceilings on farm commodities which reached parity during the life of the resolution.

The Rules Committee restrictions then were approved as modified on roll-call vote, 297-85. (Vote chart. p. 536.)

Spence told the House that controls were necessary "for the good of the people." Albert M. Cole (R Kan.) said the controls in the Defense Production Act were ineffective. He recommended a program of restrictions on money supply and government spending, pay-as-we-go taxation and high production.

There were no Banking Committee amendments. Harold D. Cooley (D N.C.) sponsored the one amendment and its modification permitted by the rule. Abraham J. Multer (D N.Y.) opposed the amendment because it would have blocked the price roll backs scheduled by the Office of Price Stabilization for July 2.

The Cooley amendment was approved on standing vote 143-87, on teller vote 165-106, and then on roll-call vote, 232-159.

The resolution was approved on voice vote without further debate.

SENATE

Floor Action

Senate discussion of the stop-gap bill was even briefer. Chairman Burnet R. Maybank (D S.C.) of the Banking and Currency Committee told the Senate:

"I hope the Senate will accept the resolution, for the reason that the principles the Senate approved in the bill passed early this morning have been practically maintained in the joint resolution providing for the short extension."

Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) said he would like to amend the resolution to extend the Wherry Military Housing Act, but he said he realized it was too late to get House agreement on such an amendment. Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) offered an amendment to liberalize credit regulations on automobiles, but then withdrew it, saying he did not want to "delay the entire procedure."

The resolution was approved on voice vote.

The President signed it June 30, and it became Public Law No. 69.

Defense Production Act Revision

S 2170; S 2180; S 2104

Summary — After passage of the bill revising and extending the Defense Production Act, the President asked Congress to repeal three provisions of the new measure. He named the provisions as the Capehart, Herlong, and Butler - Hope "amendments."

Mr. Truman said the "Capehart amendment" was the provision in the new law which specified that price ceilings should permit a seller to include in his price all cost increases incurred between the start of the Korean war and July 26, 1951. The provision had been inserted in the bill by the joint House-Senate conference called to iron out differences in two versions of the measure. Sen. Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) said it had been worked out by both Democrats and Republicans on the conference group.

The "Herlong amendment" which had been proposed by Rep. A. S. Herlong Jr., (D Fla.), banned price ceilings which would deny a retailer or wholesaler his customary percentage margin of profit.

The Butler-Hope amendment, sponsored in the Senate by Hugh Butler (R Neb.) and in the House by Clifford R. Hope (R Kan.), specified that meat slaughtering quotas could not be imposed under the Act.

Revisions Proposed

Three Republican Senators, Homer Ferguson (Mich.), Richard M. Nixon (Calif.) and Herman Welker (Idaho) the same day introduced a bill (S 2048) to strike out the criticized provisions. The bill was considered by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee and then laid aside in favor of substitute bills: S 2170, to modify, but not repeal, the "Capehart amendment" and S 2180, to permit livestock slaughtering quotas.

With the two substitutes, the Committee approved a bill (S 2104) to repeal a section of the revised Defense Production Law providing for import controls on fats, edible oils, peanuts, rice and dairy products. This change was requested by Secretary of State Dean Acheson.

The Senate approved the modification to the "Capehart amendment" Oct. 5. The session ended with the bill stalled in the House Rules Committee. There was no floor action on the other bills.

Background — Congress received a Presidential message Aug. 23 urging repeal of the Capehart, Herlong and Butler-Hope amendments which had been added to the Defense Production Act when it was extended in July.

Mr. Truman said the Capehart amendment was "an economic booby-trap." He added that this provision "saddles the consumers of America with a promissory note of higher prices payable to business on demand."

The President said the Herlong amendment offered wholesalers and retailers "a percentage stake in every price increase."

He said the Butler - Hope amendment put the "black marketeer back in the meat business. And it makes him harder to catch."

Ferguson, Nixon and Welker introduced their bill (S 2048) to repeal the three amendments the same day.

Ferguson told the Senate, "I think there is grave doubt the President really wants to hold down inflation." He added that he and his two colleagues "feel it is so vital to prevent inflation that we want to repeal these sections so we can have real enforcement."

Welker commented that "we have asked just what the President asked. The ball is in your (the Democrats) court and I hope it works."

Calls for "Enforcement"

Calling the President's criticism of his amendment "ridiculous," Butler commented that "if the OPS really wants to control the price of living, it ought to begin to enforce all of the price regulations it has already issued, instead of asking for authority to issue still more regulations of all kinds."

John W. Bricker (R Ohio), told the Senate Aug. 23 the President was using "a cheap political trick," and that he would not support the new controls bill. He commented the Mr. Truman was trying to "make the American people put the blame on Congress for an inflation that really comes from the spending policies of the Administration."

Sen. Blair Moody (D Mich.) said he thought Bricker's comments were "uncalled for in view of the fact that there was a group of the Banking and Currency Committee which tried to tear down the President's power to control inflation." Both Bricker and Moody were members of the Banking Committee, which handled the controls bill.

Senate Banking Committee Chairman Burnet R. Maybank (D S.C.) announced soon after the Truman message was read to the Senate that the Committee would hold open hearings on "any changes in the price controls act that any Senator introduces."

SENATE

Committee

Lead-off witnesses before the Committee Aug. 30 were Economic Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson and Michael V. DiSalle, head of the Office of Price Stabilization. They said that the three provisions objected to by President Truman made the price and wage controls program "unworkable."

Wilson appealed to the Senators "for the strongest and most effective law you can give us." Warning of mounting inflationary pressures, he said the so-called Capehart amendment was "an invitation to create an administrative mess that will not accomplish what you are trying to accomplish."

DiSalle said he wished he could promise the OPS could "guarantee an absolute stability of prices for the next year" if the controversial sections were repealed. "But an absolute holding of the price line may not be possible," he said, adding the prediction that "some cost increases are bound to come."

Repeal of the disputed provisions, DiSalle went on, "will not provide us with a perfect price control law, but it will give us an Act under which we can move forward with a sound and workable stabilization program." He named the livestock slaughtering quota ban as the key point in making the controls program workable.

Eric Johnston, Director of Economic Stabilization, told the group Aug. 31 that if Congress removed the restrictive amendments, regulations calling for some rollbacks in food prices would be placed in effect at once. Johnston charged that the new law had created a "crisis" in the stabilization program and if left unchanged would open the way for an inflationary spiral.

Republicans Protest

Republican Committee members assailed the Administration's drive to change the law. Bricker told Johnston to try to make the law work before he complained about it. Capehart and Andrew F. Schoeppel (R Kan.), challenged Johnston for what they termed the Admistration's "failure" to check the food price rise since on original controls law was passed on Sept. 8, 1950.

Before the Committee recessed until Sept. 10 it heard Assistant Secretary of State Willard L. Thorp and Undersecretary of Agriculture Clarence J. McCormick urge repeal of the import controls amendment which, Thorp stated, puts "new and onerous restrictions on the importation of certain agricultural products."

The Committee met again Sept. 10 and rejected 5-8 a motion by Irving M. Ives (R N.Y.) that the group recommend simple repeal of the Capehart amendment. Voting with Ives were John J. Sparkman (D Ala.), Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), William Benton (D Conn.), and Blair Moody (D Mich.). In opposition were Capehart, Bricker, Schoeppel, Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.), Maybank, J. William Fulbright (D Ark.), A. Willis Robertson (D Va.), and J. Allen Frear, Jr., (D Del.).

Chairman Maybank then named three subcommittees to study the recommended changes in the Defense Production Act. The groups were headed by Robertson (Capehart amendment), Maybank (slaughtering quotas), and Fulbright (import controls). The Herlong amendment was set aside to give the House Banking and Currency Committee a chance to act first.

The Fulbright Subcommittee was set up in answer to a request from Acheson to repeal the import control provisions. Acheson wrote Sept. 7 that the ban would "needlessly cut off overseas markets for American agriculture products and handicap our efforts to develop the defensive strength of the free world."

Capehart Amendment

The Robertson Subcommittee Sept. 13 heard Peter Henle, an economist for the American Federation of Labor, denounce the new Defense Production Act as "a fraud on the American people." He directed his attack at "the terrible Capehart amendment" and said it should be repealed, not revamped.

In testimony on the bill Sept. 14, John J. Gunther, Americans for Democratic Action, told the Subcommittee the Capehart amendment should be repealed entirely. Under the Capehart amendment, he said, the OPS "will not be able effectively to roll back excessively increased prices and equity will require that prices of competitors will be allowed to increase to like levels."

Wilbur La Roe, National Independent Meat Packers Association, asked that the Capehart amendment be retained. He said it was needed to block "a further price squeeze" which would dislocate normal beef business and lead to more black market operations. L. Blaine Liljenquist, Western States Meat Packers Association, also asked that the Capehart amendment be retained.

John A. Baker, National Farmers Union, urged Sept. 17 that the Capehart amendment be repealed and that a general retail price freeze be set.

Repeal of the Capehart amendment was opposed by representatives of the Manufacturing Chemists' Association and the Machinery and Allied Products Institute.

On Sept. 18 the following organizations opposed repeal of the amendment: National Cotton Compress and Cotton Warehouse Association, U-Tote-M Grocery Company and the National Milk Producers Association.

Nat Goldfinger, Congress of Industrial Organizations, favored repeal of the Capehart amendment.

Testimony against changes in the Capehart amendment was heard Sept. 19 from representatives of the National Cotton Council, National Association of House Dress Manufacturers, Nash Kelvinator Corp. and the Illinois Manufacturers Association.

Subcommittee Acts

The Subcommittee then amended and approved a bill (S 2092) introduced Aug. 31 by Maybank. As approved, it modified the Capehart amendment to provide for ceiling price increases to include "necessary and unavoidable" increases in costs. Labor, materials and transportation were specified as costs which would directly raise the ceilings. Other costs, including "selling, advertising, office and all other production, distribution and administration costs," would also be taken into consideration, and "reasonable allowances" be provided.

The original S 2092 had not used the phrase "necessary and unavoidable", had specified full price ceiling adjustments for material and direct factory labor costs only and had included transportation in the category requiring only a "reasonable allowance."

The July 26, 1951, cut-off date for cost increases was retained.

The Subcommittee approved the amended bill 3-2, voting along party lines. The full Committee voted to approve it Sept. 20, 9-4 in closed session. Capehart said later the bill "takes the heart out of the Capehart amendment."

The modified measure was re-introduced as a clean bill Sept. 24 under a new number (S 2170). Sponsors were Maybank, Fulbright, Robertson, Sparkman, Frear, Douglas, Benton and Moody. It was formally reported to the Senate the same day.

A GOP minority report called the President's criticism of the Capehart amendment "intemperate and ill-considered" and urged that the amendment be left intact.

Import Controls

The Fulbright Subcommittee heard testimony Sept. 13 and 14 on proposals to repeal the import control provisions of the Defense Production Act.

On the first day of testimony the group heard Martin A. Fromer, executive secretary of Cheese Importers Association of America, Inc., urge repeal of the Production Act's ban on importation of fats, oils and certain dairy products. F. B. Wise, secretary-treasurer of the National Renderers Association, recommended continuation of the ban. Laurence E. Sozzi, representing the American Chamber of Commerce for Trade with Italy, Inc., supported removal of the prohibition.

M. R. Garstang, National Milk Producers Federation, told the Subcommittee Sept. 14 that import controls should be retained. "There is a serious question," he said, "as to whether American dairy farmers can maintain a reasonable standard of living and at the same time compete with foreign agricultural imports produced at low cost in countries having lower standards of living."

John A. Baker, National Farmers Union, supported repeal saying, "The immediate effects of the restrictions will be to seriously damage agriculture interests of friendly countries."

Adolph C. Dolder, Switzerland Cheese Association, also supported the bill. E. W. Gaumnitz, National Cheese Institute, opposed it.

The Subcommittee then recommended that a bill (S 2104), introduced Sept. 7 by Maybank, and repealing the import control provisions, be approved. The full Committee accepted it in closed session Sept. 20 on what was reported to be a voice vote.

The bill did not receive floor action in the Senate or House.

Slaughtering Quotas

The Maybank Subcommittee held hearings Sept. 17, 18 and 19 on a bill (S 1928) to permit slaughtering quotas. The measure was introduced July 30 by Capehart and Maybank.

Speaking for the Western States Meat Packers Association Sept. 17, L. Blaine Liljenquist told the group, "There is much evidence that slaughter quotas actually cause black markets rather than prevent them."

Joseph B. Danzansky, National Association of Meat Processors and Wholesalers, favored quotas. Sen. Butler and J. C. Petersen, National Lamb Feeders Association, opposed the bill.

Testifying against the bill Sept. 18 were the American National Cattlemen's Association, Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association, and the National Independent Meat Packers Association. On Sept. 19, the bill was supported by the National Association of Independent Beef Slaughterers, National Farmers Union, Congress of Industrial Organizations and Indiana Livestock Producers Association. A representative of the Corn Belt Livestock Feeders Association testified in opposition to the bill.

The Subcommittee recommended approval of the bill with changes. The amendments were designed to prevent future rollbacks in beef price ceilings and to insure fair distribution of all available livestock available for slaughtering.

The measure was introduced as a clean bill (S 2180) Sept. 25 by Maybank. The Committee approved it in closed session, 10-2. Bricker and Schoeppel were reported to have voted against the measure.

The bill was not taken up on the Senate floor

Debate

The bill (S 2170) to modify the Capehart amendment was called up for Senate debate Oct. 4.

One of the measure's supporters A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) described the modification as a middle-of-the-road position between Mr. Truman's demand for repeal, and outright retention which many Republicans had sought. Maybank said no drastic price rollbacks would be possible under the new provision but that it should permit a workable effort to stabilize prices at about their current levels.

The Senate rejected, 28 to 44, on roll-call vote (See Page 532) a substitute proposed by Capehart which would have permitted the government to set industry-wide ceilings and would have guaranteed the right of farmers to demand readjustments if they were hurt financially by the government's program.

Farmers would have to prove, he said, that they were losing money as a result of a rise in necessary and unavoidable costs, and then the government would have to make the appropriate adjustments. Moody said the price control law would be unworkable under Capehart's plan, because the government would have no discretion in the matter of adjustments. A. S. (Mike) Monroney (D Okla.) said Capehart's amendment would permit farmers to "pyramid their costs."

Immediately after introducing his substitute plan, Capehart offered an amendment designed to tie the reimposition of slaughter quotas to the pricing provision. The amendment had the same provisions as the slaughter quota bill (S 2180) reported by the Banking and Currency Committee. Maybank pointed out the Senate would have a chance to vote later on that question, and moved to table the Capehart quota amendment. His motion carried by a 49 to 16 roll-call vote.

The bill was passed, 49-21 on roll-call vote. Democrats were solidly for the measure, 35-0; Republicans opposed it 14-21.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) — Substitute for S 2170 to allow government to set industry-wide ceiling prices and permit farmers to obtain price adjustments if they prove they are being hurt by these ceiling prices. Roll-call vote 28 to 44.

Capehart — Amendment to substitute, providing for reimposition of slaughtering quotas. Tabled, by motion of Sen. Burnet R. Maybank (D S.C.) on roll call 49 to 16.

HOUSE

Committee

The House Banking and Currency Committee held a one-day hearing Oct. 9 on the Senate-passed bill to modify the Capehart amendment. Only witness was OPS Director DiSalle. He said he would prefer outright repeal of the Capehart amendment but thought the modifications in the bill would make price controls workable.

The Committee approved the bill 15-7 in closed session Oct. 11. An amendment was added which changed the pre-war base-price period from Jan. 1, 1950, through June 24, 1950, to July 1, 1949, through June 24 1950.

The bill was sent to the Rules Committee where Oct. 16 it was shelved for the year by a secret vote.

Other Hearings On Controls

The broad powers of the Defense Production Act extended into the jurisdiction of several Congressional committees. Some of these committees held hearings during the year to study various phases of the economic mobilization program. Occasionally the findings of these committees resulted in amendments to the Defense Production Act. (For details of action extending and amending the Act, see p. 438.)

Controls "Watchdog"

The original Defense Production Act set up a joint watchdog committee to keep a running check on administration of the Act. The Joint Committee on Defense Production was headed by Sen. Burnet R. Maybank, (D S.C.) chairman, and Rep. Paul Brown (D Ga.), vice chairman. Members were Sens. J. William Fulbright (D Ark.), A. Willis Robertson (D Va.), Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) and John W. Bricker (R Ohio.) and Reps. Wright Patman (D Tex.), Albert Rains (D Ala.), Ralph A. Gamble (R N.Y.) Henry O. Talle (R Iowa).

All Watchdog Committee members also were ranking members of the House and Senate Banking and Currency Committees, the groups having jurisdiction over the Defense Production Act extension bills. A formal report on the Watchdog Committee hearings was filed in October. Findings of the group also were passed on informally to other Banking Committee members and eventually helped shape the pending extension bills.

The Watchdog Committee met in closed sessions. Records of the hearings, with confidential information deleted, were later released to the public. Here is a summary of the group's meetings:

Wilson Progress Report

Charles E. Wilson, director of Defense Mobilization, opened the series of hearings Feb. 8. Wilson said the military planned to spend from 50 to 55 billion dollars annually for the coming two years for military equipment. "We must maintain and expand our basic economic strength," he said, "so that our defense requirements may be met on a continuing basis without seriously weakening our economy."

"It seems to me in the next three years—and this is our fundamental philosophy in my office over there—," he told the Committee, "we must get our strength, we must have the end items of material that we need, war material that we need, in good supply at the end of three years, and at the same time keep a sound economy in the country. I believe it can be done."

In answer to questions, Wilson said:

A Controlled Materials Plan would be set up to allocate all available supplies of scarce materials;

United States production of aluminum would trail demand for the next two years; then new plants would produce a surplus of aluminum;

A special small-business division would be set up to see that small businesses were given the greatest possible share of defense contracts;

A "completely impartial judicial body" would be set up to rule on manpower problems.

Other Progress Reports

Eric Johnston, administrator of the Economic Stabilization Agency, and Michael V. DiSalle, director of the Office of Price Stabilization, appeared before the Committee Feb. 9. They made their first reports on attempts to stabilize wages and prices under the Defense Production Act.

Johnston explained that control of stabilization of the economy had been delegated by the President to Wilson. Wilson delegated the power to Johnston, and Johnston redelegated parts of it--control of prices to DiSalle and control of wages to the Wage Stabilization Board.

Prices continued to rise at an ever faster pace through January, 1951, Johnston said. Voluntary controls failed, he said, so DiSalle and the WSB were to order freezes in their respective fields. DiSalle ordered a price freeze Jan. 26. Labor and management members of the WSB, however, voted against a wage freeze, Johnston said, so he personally had to issue the wage freeze order. It was issued simultaneously with the price order, as was required under the Defense Production Act.

In answer to questions from the Committee, DiSalle made the following points:

The Office of Price Stabilization should have a greater voice in enforcement of its price orders;

Workable controls could and should be put on raw cotton. (Maybank warned him such an attempt would mean "chaos" in the cotton industry);

Prices would rise five to seven points on the index before they leveled off;

OPS employees were 65 per cent Republican;

Political recommendations were received on OPS employees, but no political clearance was given on appointments.

WSB, DPA and NPA

The Committee heard representatives of three of the top defense agencies Feb. 13. They were George E. Clifford, legislative counsel, National Production Authority; Edward Gibson, deputy administrator, Defense Production Administration; and Peter Seitz, acting assistant to the chairman, Wage Stabilization Board.

Gibson said the DPA was charged with developing a production program, finding strategic materials and distributing them. He said first priority on material went to military production, second priority to necessary civilian production and third to the materials stockpile.

Seitz, in his progress report, said a freeze had been set on wages by the WSB Jan. 26. Since that date, he said, the group had been busy "thawing some of the inequities in that "freeze order." Wages, he said, could not be frozen completely in the existing flexible economy.

Clifford said the NPA administered the defense loan provisions of the Defense Production Act. He assured the Committee that an office would be set up in the NPA to look after small business loans.

DiSalle Returns

OPS Director DiSalle returned to the Committee March 2. He was asked if any OPS employes had been involved in the reported sales of federal jobs in Mississippi.

DiSalle said his employees had not been named. All of his Mississippi officials, he said, were civil service workers. He outlined the screening process used to check new OPS employees.

In answer to questions, DiSalle said that a one per cent increase in wages would mean one-third of one per cent increase in the overall cost of living. He said that if all food prices were set at parity it would mean a one-half of one per cent increase in the cost of living.

Cotton Freeze

Secretary of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan and DiSalle gave the Committee their views March 8 on the cotton price freeze.

Brannan said he had recommended against the freeze on raw cotton, saying it would be unworkable. He asked instead for a ceiling on cotton at the commodity markets. DiSalle said the law directed him to stabilize all prices and that he couldn't exclude cotton. The whole stabilization program might have failed, he said, if raw cotton had not been frozen.

On March 19 the Committee quizzed Manly Fleischmann, NPA Administrator, on the tax amortization program. Fleischmann said his group had received $11.5 billion worth of requests for amortization and that about $2.5 billion had been granted. He said the concessions were given when a plant constructed for war production would be of no use to the company after the emergency. Committee members criticized Fleischmann for giving certificates for amortization to large, wealthy corporations.

ODM Director Wilson testified again April 4. He predicted that there would be a slight, temporary fall in prices. He said customers were refusing to pay higher prices for some commodities.

Asserting that inflation was the nation's greatest problem, Wilson said ODM took the view that it "can be controlled." He also expressed the opinion that with "the wholehearted cooperation of everyone," it might be possible to remove wage-price controls and other emergency curbs "sometime in 1953."

Controlled Materials Plan

William H. Harrison, chief of the Defense Production Administration was also a witness. He informed the Committee that a new "controlled materials plan" — similar to the World War II plan for channeling scarce materials to defense and essential civilian manufacturing — was being shaped by his agency.

The Committee continued April 12 to question Harrison, this time on the tax amortization program. Harrison said that the new bill to extend the controls law would ask that the government be allowed to build plants for production of war materials.

Harrison said that when plans — such as those producing guided missiles — had no postwar value, it would be more practical if the government were to build the plant. The existing Act permitted limited aid in building defense plants.

Beef Prices

The Watchdog Committee opened a two-day inquiry June 13 into the effects of the beef price rollback.

Testimony was given June 13 by Paul C. Smith, Swift and Company; Roscoe C. Haynie, Wilson Packing Company; Harry Moore, John Morrell Company; Joe Montague, Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association; C. L. Farrington, Indianapolis commission livestock buyer; Ray S. Paul, Rath's; James Olsen, Hormel; John Heinz, Heinz Riverside Abbatoir, Baltimore, Md., and G. B. Mackey, Armour's.

Smith said meat controls had failed in World War II and asked that all wage and price controls be dropped. Haynie said farmers could not afford to keep and fatten their cattle and would sell them at short weight.

Chairman Maybank said he felt the rollback had been an error. Rep. Brown said wage-price controls should have been applied earlier.

Price Stabilizer DiSalle told the group June 15 that two pending beef price roll-backs would be carried through. He said beef would be in sufficient supply and that beef blackmarkets did not exist.

Charles F. Brannan, Secretary of Agriculture, said the 10 per cent price rollback already in effect would not hurt cattlemen, nor would the scheduled 4 1/2 per cent rollback eat up all profits. The last 4 1/2 per cent rollback, scheduled for October, might mean a loss to growers and feeders, he testified.

Annual Report

The first annual report of the Committee, issued Oct. 19, said that "as the military program in the days ahead pinches our economy and reduces the amount of available civilian goods, the problems will grow more complex and the incidence of business failures will increase."

The report criticized the Administration for delay in freezing prices and wages. The delay, according to the Committee, "precipitated many of the difficult obstacles which the Office of Price Stabilization has found to be almost insuperable in the control of our economy."

Senate Labor Committee

The Senate Committee on Labor and Welfare held a series of hearings on the operation of the wage stabilization provisions of the Defense Production Act. A majority of the Committee members reported Oct. 18 that the Wage Stabilization Board should be retained as it was and that the provisions for compulsory controls be kept in reserve in case of all-out war.

In a minority report, Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) said he doubted the authority of the President to set up a Wage Stabilization Board under the Defense Production Act. He recommended that a majority of WSB members represent the public and be free of connections with either management or labor.

Eric Johnston, Economic Stabilization Administrator, opened the hearings May 22. He said he believed that wages could be held to less than a 10 per cent rise each year, using existing machinery.

Dr. George W. Taylor, chairman of the WSB, explained the function of his group and said wage scales should be adjusted to the cost of living.

Hoyt P. Steele, United States Chamber of Commerce, May 29 urged that the powers of the Board be cut back and that it stop giving case-by-case rulings on wage boosts. He suggested that wage ceiling changes should be general rather than applicable only to a single case.

Walter Mason, American Federation of Labor, and Arthur H. Goldberg, CIO, testified May 31. Both insisted the Wage Board was needed to work out some labor disputes.

W. M. Leiserson, former member of the National Labor Relations Board, told the group June 1 that the Wage Stabilization Board should be dropped in favor of a federal conciliation service to operate under policy orders laid down by Stabilization Director Johnston.

Ira Mosher, National Association of Manufacturers, testified June 8 that the WSB interfered with normal collective bargaining. He recommended that if the group were continued, it have power only to set wage policy, not to decide individual wage disputes.

Elmer E. Walker, labor member of the WSB, told the committee that labor would be willing to give a no-strike pledge for the duration of the emergency in exchange for a no-lockout agreement by industry, provided a group like the WSB existed to settle disputes.

House Labor Committee

The House Committee on Education and Labor made a study of wage stabilization similar to the one carried on by the Senate Labor group. A subcommittee recommended June 21 that the Defense Production Act be amended to reduce the Board to a policy-making body.

On a reported vote of 12-3, the group asked that a new board be named with public members outnumbering labor and industry members. They also asked that an independent union member be placed on the WSB.

On recommendation of Subcommittee Chairman Wingate H. Lucas (D Tex.), the full Committee June 25 approved a bill (HR 4552) to revise the WSB. Vote on the bill was reported to be 15-7.

The bill later was offered by Lucas as an amendment to the Defense production revision bill. The House turned it down, 113-217 on teller vote (see page 453).

The Subcommittee investigation opened May 28 with testimony from WSB Chairman Taylor. He said his group had a backlog of 3,000 cases—most of them requests for wage increases. Taylor said a special wage board was needed because emergency labor dispute provisions in the Taft-Hartley Labor Relations Act were too clumsy to work during time of war.

Economic Stabilizer Johnston said May 31 that labor and business representatives on the Wage Board would be fair in looking after the interests of small businesses or unions, even though their backgrounds were with big business or big unions.

Chairman Lucas said the major responsibility for fairness rested with the six public members of the Board, since the labor and business members represented "big" organizations. He suggested that all Board members be confirmed by the Senate.

"No Added Powers"

The Subcommittee heard Cyrus S. Ching testify June 4 that the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service which he headed needed no added powers to carry out its duties during the emergency. It depended on persuasion and would lose its effectiveness if it were given power to force settlements, he said.

R. B. Robertson, Jr., addressing the Subcommittee June 7, charged that the Wage Stabilization Board's policy has been one of "thawing out" the wage freeze. He was an industry member of the board.

Robertson declared that 80 million people in the fixed-income group had no representation on the Board.

Elmer E. Walker, labor member of the board, said June 8 that the WSB should be continued. Nathan P. Feinsinger, Clark Kerr and Frederick Bullen, public members of the WSB, testified June 11. They said that independent unions, not represented on the 18-man board, had received fair treatment from the group. The six labor members, they said, were all from AFL or CIO. Six members represent industry, and six the public.

Secretary of Labor Maurice J. Tobin urged June 12 that the WSB be continued. He said the group was needed for handling wage stabilization disputes. The NLRB, he said, performed a different function.

Ira Mosher, National Association of Manufacturers, said June 12 the WSB setup encouraged wage increases. He recommended that dispute be settled through normal peacetime collective bargaining.

Don Mahon, National Brotherhood of Packinghouse Workers (Independent), and Arthur Sorensen, Confederated Unions of America, both asked June 13 that independent unions be given a representative on the WSB.

Hoyt P. Steele, Chamber of Commerce of the United States, told the Subcommittee June 14 that "no additional machinery", such as the WSB, was needed to settled labor disputes.

House Agriculture Committee

A study of OPS orders to roll back the price of beef was made by the House Agriculture Committee. After a series of hearings, the group voted in closed session June 8 to ask the President to cancel the rollback orders.

The Committee voted June 19 to instruct Chairman Harold D. Cooley (D N.C.) to prepare an amendment to the Defense Production Act extension bill which would cancel the orders. Cooley offered such an amendment during debate on the bill, but it was rejected by the House 124-217 on teller vote. (See p. 453.)

The Committee opened hearings on beef prices May 16. Loren C. Bamert, National Cattlemen's Association, said the rollback order merely took the "squeeze" off meat processors and put it on producers. He said there would be a considerable loss of meat through the shipment of cattle to the market before the cows matured, to beat the rollback deadline. He predicted that meat rationing was "almost certain" within a few months.

E. Howard Hill, Iowa Farm Bureau Federation, said the uncertain future would keep cattlemen from fattening their cattle that summer. H. E. Pickett, Kansas State Livestock Association, presented figures showing cases where cattlemen would operate at a loss if the OPS rollback went through.

F. E. Mollin, American National Cattlemen's Association; Cushman Radebaugh, Florida State Cattlemen's Association; Sylvan Friedman, Louisiana Cattlemen's Association, and H. E. Slusher, Missouri Farm Bureau, all predicted that the order would lead to a meat shortage.

Brannan Testifies

Secretary of Agriculture Brannan testified before the Committee May 17 and predicted that the beef price rollback would result in more meat for the next year or so, but that it would mean less meat for three to five years after. He qualified his prediction, however, saying it was too early to be sure of the effects of the order. Brannan said he had supplied Price Stabilizer DiSalle with the information leading to the rollback order but that he had not approved nor disapproved it. Chairman Cooley said Brannan's statements had "failed to justify" the price order.

Among cattlemen who appeared May 18 to protest the rollback were Ray W. Willoughby, South Western Cattle Raisers Association, and Fred Sherer, OPS Livestock Advisory Committee. Sherer said the Committee had not been consulted about the rollback. Willoughby said cattlemen might have to operate at a loss under the order.

W. J. Brown, and Warren Monfort, Greeley, Colo., cattlemen, said they might have to go out of business if the rollback were completed.

Cooley and ranking minority member Clifford R. Hope (R Kan.) May 23 criticized DiSalle for the meat rollback order. Hope said the order was made in a "casual" way without sufficient study. Cooley urged DiSalle to abandon the further rollbacks which have been announced.

DiSalle insisted his agency had studied the effect of a rollback for several months and that it was impossible to stabilize prices without hurting someone.

Arval Erikson, OPS meat director, was criticized by W. R. Poage (D Tex.) on the ground that all benefits from the rollback went to processors, wholesalers and retailers. Erikson said the processors and retailers were caught in a squeeze when their prices were frozen in January. The cattle rollback, he said, was designed to relieve them.

Eric Johnston, Economic Stabilization Administrator, was the final witness May 25. He told the group that he doubted cattlemen were really hurt by the price rollback order. He said cattlemen were complaining merely because they were opposed to all kinds of controls.

"You can't control wages unless you control the cost of living," Johnston said.

Any stabilization program, he said, will "step on somebody's toes". Johnston said the ESA is considering price rollbacks on things bought by the Defense Department.

Contract Renegotiation

Summary — One of the early major actions of the 82nd Congress was to authorize the government to write language into federal contracts let as part of the mobilization effort making those contracts renegotiable under certain conditions. Legislation to do this was requested by the Administration, and was patterned after similar legislation in effect during World War II. About $10 billion was returned to the federal Treasury under the World War II renegotation statute which affected some $200 billion worth of contracts at that time.

However, HR 1724 enacted by the 82nd Congress was more comprehensive than the earlier renegotiation legislation. While contracts let directly by the armed services were already subject to renegotiation before the passage of HR 1724, the new law — to remain in force until Dec. 31, 1953 — made other federal defense contracts subject to renegotiation

A five-man Renegotiation Board was set up by HR 1724, but was given authority to exempt certain contracts. In studying profits under the defense contracts, the Board would consider efficiency of the contractor, reasonableness of costs and profits, extent of risk assumed, contribution to the defense effort, character of the business and other factors. Decisions would be subject to review by the U. S. Tax Court.

The new law stipulated that the first $250,000 received in any fiscal year by a contractor or subcontractor would be exempted from renegotiation under the bill. It would require renegotiation for contract brokers — the "five per centers" — for any year in which their receipts and accruals were $25,000 or more.

The measure also exempted from renegotiation under some circumstances certain contracts for agricultural products in their natural state, for the unprocessed output of mines, oil or gas wells and mineral or natural deposits, timber in form of logs, and also subcontracts under a contract to which the bill would not apply, and contracts with states and other governments.

The Administration-backed legislation got through Congress with relative ease. The House approved its version of HR 1724 on Jan. 23 by a roll-call ballot of 377-0. There was little debate and no amendments were offered from the floor. (See page 540 for vote.)

It was a different story in the Senate, however. The upper chamber passed HR 1724 on Feb. 21 by a voice vote, but only after making a total of 87 changes in the House-approved version and taking a number of roll-call votes on parliamentary maneuvers. (See page 535 for votes.)

A conference committee met to reconcile the two differing versions. When the group achieved a compromise, the resulting bill more closely resembled the Senate's version. The compromise was accepted by the House and the Senate on March 12, by voice votes.

President Truman signed the legislation into Public Law 9 on March 23.

Provisions — As enacted into law, HR 1724 was called the "Renegotiation Act of 1951", and carried two main sections, or titles, as follows:

Title I.

This title dealt with the "Renegotiation of Contracts," and its provisions:

Declared that policy required "the elimination of excessive profits from contracts made with the United States."

Defined "contracts subject to renegotiation" Renegotiation, previously applicable only to contracts with the armed services directly, was extended to a long list of contracting or subconstracting agencies as well as to any other agency designated by the President. Those named in the bill were: Defense Department, Army, Navy, Air Force, Commerce Department, General Services Administration, Atomic Energy Commission, Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Canal Zone government and company, and the Housing and Home Finance Agency. To be renegotiable, a contract or subcontract "must have a direct and immediate connection with national defense."

Set forth "general definitions" of terms peculiar to the legislative intent of HR 1724, and spelled out the particular points that the actual language used in federal contracts should cover.

Permitted companies using accelerated amortization of plant costs for tax purposes also to treat this as an "allowable item of cost" when computing expenses for renegotiation purposes.

Outlined "renegotiation proceedings" before a Board to handle them. The Board was charged with initiating renegotiation action when it spots "excessive" profits. If it is unable to work out an agreement with the contractor to return the money to the government, it may make a determination on its own and order the money repaid, though this action can be appealed to the U. S. Tax Court. In determining "excessive" profits, the Board must take into consideration efficiency, reduction of costs, economy in the use of materials, facilities and manpower, relation of costs and profits to volume of production, normal earnings and comparison of war and peacetime products, net worth, extent of risk assumed, type of contribution to the defense effort, character of business and any other factors viewed as being in the "public interest."

Detailed "methods of eliminating excessive profits" by renegotiation, and carried sections on: indemnification, treatment of recoveries, credit for taxes paid, periods of limitations, suits for recovery, sureties, assignees, interest, information to be made available (financial statements and audits), and computation.

Set a floor for the minimum amounts subject to renegotiation.

No contractor or subcontractor would be subject to renegotiation if his total renegotiable contracts amounted to $250,000 or less a year. Also, a contractor's or subcontractor's total income from renegotiable contracts might not be reduced to less than $250,000 annually.

Listed mandatory exemptions from renegotiation under the act. All contracts for raw farm goods, timber and mineral and oil products which have not been treated "beyond the first form or state suitable for industrial use" were exempted from renegotiation, while contracts with common carriers and public utilities also were exempt if rates charged were no higher than that allowed by public regulatory bodies. Contracts for durable productive equipment with "average useful life" of more than five years would be "partially" exempt, depending upon the equipment's usability.

Created a Renegotiation Board, an independent, five - man group to handle renegotiation, with the chairman receiving a $17,500 salary and other members $15,000. President Truman was to appoint the five men, subject to Senate confirmation, but Secretaries of the Air Force, Army and Navy each might recommend one civilian member.

Spelled out permissive exemptions the Board would be able to make. The Board was empowered, at its discretion, to exempt contracts — "individually or by general classes or types" — covering personal services, real property or perishable goods, or others which it deemed could not result in excessive profits. Specific power also was granted for exemptions where renegotiation might jeopardize secrecy needed in the public interest.

Hit at "five percenters" — so-called because some brokers frequently helped companies secure contracts on payment of a fee usually of five per cent — by requiring that contract brokers renegotiate for any year in which their receipts and accruals were $25,000 or more.

Specified that:

a. Amounts received starting Jan. 1, 1951, attributable to performance beginning after July 1, 1950, would be renegotiable, while those received for performance after Dec. 31, 1953, would not be, unless the act were renewed.

b. Renegotiation indebtedness would carry a 4 per cent interest rate.

c. Losses on renegotiable business sustained in one year might be allowed as an item of cost in the next year, though not beyond that, provided it was not due to "gross inefficiency" of the contractor.

Spelled out methods of obtaining a review by the U. S. Tax Court.

Provided for redetermination under the Renegotiation Act, rules and regulations and compliance with them, application of the Administrative Procedure Act, appropriations as necessary to implement HR 1724, and for the prosecution of claims.

Title II.

This title dealt with "Miscellaneous Provisions", as follows:

The War Contracts Price Adjustment Board created by the World War II renegotiation legislation was abolished, and its functions transferred to other affected agencies, including the new Renegotiation Board set up by HR 1724.

Previous statutes relating to renegotiation and the Internal Revenue Code were amended as necessary to reflect changes and creations effected by the new law.

Background — The Administration-backed renegotiation bill was patterned after a similar law passed in World War II after it was found that many war contracts had been let at unrealistic figures. The sums were unrealistic because many manufacturers had no production cost data available when they accepted the contracts, and thus tended to state cushioned prices. When actual cost data was available, and the original prices were seen to be excessive, the government pressed for the law permitting the original contracts to be renegotiated.

More than $10 billion was returned to the federal Treasury through the World War II renegotiation law. It did not subject the contract brokers, who charge fees to obtain government contracts for clients, to renegotiation.

Many contracts let by the Department of Defense in 1950 already were subject to renegotiation under terms of the 1948 Renegotiation Act which originally covered aircraft procurement contracts but was later extended to other military orders. Under terms of the 1951 bill, renegotiation was to be extended to other federal defense contracts and a uniform procedure established.

It was to cover contracts and subcontracts with the Defense Department, General Services Administration, Atomic Energy Commission, Commerce Department, and any other agencies which the President designated as engaged in defense efforts.

The proposed legislation had no relation to the law enacted during the "lame duck" session of the 81st Congress which extended Title II of the 1941 War Powers Act. That step was taken to authorize the government to modify existing defense contracts in cases where prices had originally been fixed too low and adjustments were essential to keep the contracting firms in production. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, page 462.)

HOUSE

The Administration-backed renegotiation bill was introduced in the 82nd Congress on Jan. 12, and was sent to the House Ways and Means Committee, which approved it Jan. 17. There were no formal hearings, because the group had taken extensive testimony on kindred legislation late in 1950 during the last months of the 81st Congress.

After its Jan. 17 approval, the Committee requested Chairman Robert L. Doughton (D N.C.) to introduce a "clean bill", which he promptly did. This measure (HR 1724) was formally reported on Jan. 20.

The House took up the measure on Jan. 23. No amendments were offered to the bill as reported. Debate was brief.

Rep. Doughton said the program would supplement the existing excess-profits tax. Where the tax applied only to corporations, the new program would put a profits lid on all business enterprises, he said. Rep. Adolph Sabath (D Ill.), however, objected to the bill's exemption of $100,000 of earnings—he said renegotiation should be required when as much as $25,000 has been earned by a contractor or when $10,000 has been earned by a broker.

Rep. Daniel A. Reed (R N.Y.) said the bill delegated authority in "broad and unrestricted language" that was not good practice in normal times.

When the final vote was taken on the bill, the House passed it by a unanimous 377-0 roll-call ballot. (See page 540 for vote.)

SENATE

Hearings

Chairman Walter F. George (D Ga.) of the Senate Finance Committee was highly critical Jan. 31 of the House-passed bill designed to recapture excess - war profits through renegotiation.

As public hearings began on HR 1724, George called the bill unwieldy, "undermining" to the effort to increase industrial production, and difficult to enforce.

Frank L. Roberts, chairman of the Military Renegotiation Policy Board of the Defense Department, said the government needed broad powers for contract negotiation because the 1948 act did not furnish "sufficient protection."

Contract renegotiation legislation encourages waste, Col. W. F. Rockwell of the Rockwell Manufacturing Co., Pittsburgh, testified before the Senate Finance Committee Feb. 2. He said that the government would receive more revenue from higher excess - profits taxes than from contract renegotiation, on the theory that renegotiation provides a profit for the undetected waste, but an excess-profits tax provides for profits on every saving.

XUM

Ellsworth C. Alvord, chairman of the Chamber of Commerce committee on federal finance, labelled the bill "un-democratic and un-American".

Subsequent witnesses and their positions were:

John J. Riggle, of the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives, urged mandatory exemption for government purchases of agricultural commodities "in their first marketable or natural state"; H. E. Foreman, Associated General Contractors, favored exemption of contracts awarded through "open advertised competitive bidding". Former Rep. Wesley E. Disney (D Okla.), representing Independent Natural Gas Association and Western Oil and Gas Association, asked for exemption of natural gas, oil and pipeline companies. W. D. Lawson, of the National Cotton Council and American Cotton Shippers Association, and Charles G. Caffrey of the American Cotton Manufacturing Institute, urged that all cotton transactions be exempted.

Committee

The Senate Finance Committee Feb. 14 reported HR 1724 with amendments. As reported by the Senate group, the legislation differed in a number of provisions from the House-approved measure.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation was included with the armed services, General Services Administration, Atomic Energy Commission and the Commerce Department as agencies with which contracts were to be renegotiable.

The Committee limited the President's power to designate other departments in the group; the House had given the President authority to designate any other agencies engaged in defense efforts.

The Committee bill permitted a one-year carry-over of net losses and reduced the rate of interest from 6 per cent, as provided in the House version, to 4 per cent. It raised the minimum amount subject to renegotiation from $100,000 to $500,000.

The Senate group broadened the exemptions for agricultural commodities, mine, oil, and gas products. It provided for mandatory exemptions of charitable and educational organizations if income from such contracts was not "unrelated business income" for federal income-tax purposes.

The amended bill provided that the five-member board be appointed as follows: one each by the Secretaries of the Army, Navy, Air Force, GSA and the chairman by the President. The House-approved measure provided that the entire board be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and stipulated that at least three of the members must be civilians.

Floor Action

The House-passed renegotiation bill reached the Senate floor Feb. 19, where it immediately got involved in a see-saw fight over a Committee-endorsed provision giving the proposed board authority, at its discretion, to exempt from renegotiation whatever contracts it felt could not possibly involve excessive profits.

The House had written into its version of the bill a number of mandatory exemptions, such as government contracts with foreign governments and contracts for agricultural commodities in their raw state, mineral products or timber in their first form. The Senate Committee had further liberalized these specific exemptions and expanded the mandatory list to include transportation and public utility service contracts. It then added the permissive exemption power.

Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) moved that the permissive exemptions section be stricken from the bill. He took the position that it would open the door to "influence peddlers" and "five percenters" and "expose public officials to temptation and the government to corruption."

Sen. Walter F. George (D Ga.), chairman of the Finance Committee, led the floor fight against Douglas. He said the House and his own Committee "had taken care of" agriculture, livestock growers, mines and other producers by exempting their contracts, on a mandatory basis, from renegotiation. It would be the height of inconsistency, and make the law administratively unworkable, George contended, to write in these mandatory exemptions and then deny the proposed board the power to exempt other contracts which it felt could not possibly yield undue profits. Both the permissive and mandatory exemptions were contained in the World War II law, he argued.

Sen. Owen Brewster (R Maine), who supported Douglas' position, said the issue involved only the permissive exemptions, though as far as the mandatory list was concerned "there might be arguments as to whether some items" should be included. He argued that dangers of abuse of the permissive provision "had been repeatedly pointed out" by Brig. Gen. Maurice Hirsch, of Houston, Tex., who had been chiefly responsible for administration of the World War II law. Sen. Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) said if there was to be renegotiation, all contracts should be subject to it.

Douglas Motion Defeated

On a roll-call vote, Douglas' motion to strike out the permissive exemptions clause was adopted, 42 to 39. (See page 535 for vote.)

In a customary parliamentary maneuver, intended to make sure the vote would stick, Douglas moved to reconsider and Ferguson moved to table Douglas' motion to do this. This is the standard manner in which the question of reconsideration is disposed of by winners of any Senate voting contest, since only a single motion to reconsider may be offered.

A roll-call vote on Ferguson's motion was demanded by Majority Leader Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.) and on the ballot, the Senate voted 41 to 41. Thus the motion to table was lost.

Douglas sought at once to withdraw his reconsideration motion, but was reminded by George, who was confirmed by Vice President Alben Barkley, that a motion to reconsider could be withdrawn only upon majority vote of the Senate. The withdrawal effort was abandoned.

George again told the Senate that deletion of the section would render almost impossible administration of the proposed law, while Brewster and Ferguson joined Douglas in arguing that all exemptions, both mandatory and permissive, should be removed.

On the ballot, the Senate decided, 42 to 40, to reconsider its previous acceptance of the Douglas motion. This time, however, the amendment was rejected, 42 to 41, leaving the Committee's disputed provision, after four roll calls, still in the bill.

Approve Limitation

Later the Senate adopted, on voice vote, a Douglas amendment barring the board from exempting individual firms from renegotiation and limiting exemptions to a general class or type of business. Douglas told the Senate this would prevent the board from picking any individual firm for "favoritism" and "narrow the range of abuse." George agreed to its passage and said he would "study" it in conference.

As the House had passed it, the bill authorized renegotiation of defense contracts in excess of $100,000. The Senate exempted amounts under $500,000. Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) offered a motion designed to lower the exemption but withdrew it upon assurance of George that he expected $250,000 to $300,000 would be the figure finally agreed to by the conferees.

After amendments had been disposed of, the Senate moved on to approve HR 1724 by a voice vote on Feb. 21.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

John L. McClellan (D Ark) — Limit renegotiation to contracts having immediate connection with national defense. Feb. 19, voice.

Hugh Butler (R Neb.) — Exempt construction contracts awarded on competitive bids. Feb. 19, voice.

Wayne Morse (R Ore.) — Vest in the board discretionary power to review decisions involving hardship cases. Feb. 19, voice.

Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) — Include ginned cotton and scoured wool as agricultural commodity in raw state. Feb. 21, voice.

Francis Case (R S.D.) — Prohibit delegation of permissive powers by board. Feb. 21, voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

William Langer (R N.D.) — Limit "commission" men to total of $25,000 fee on any one contract. Feb. 19, voice.

Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) — Require renegotiation in exceptional or aggravated cases even though contracts otherwise exempted. Feb. 21, voice.

CONFERENCE

On Feb. 22, a joint House-Senate conference met to reconcile the House and Senate versions of HR 1724. The Senate had made 87 changes in the lower chamber's version. By the time the conference committee completed its work at harmonization, the House had given in to the Senate view on 50 of these amendments. The Senate gave in to the House on 19, on which the original House language was left intact.

On the remaining 18, the House accepted the Senate's changes only after altering them in turn. Many of these amendments dealt with minor clerical or technical matters.

The conference committee's compromise version was completed March 7, and reported to the two chambers. The major compromises reached by the conference were detailed to the Senate by Walter F. George (D Ga.) as follows:

First. All of the Senate amendments relating to the exemption of agricultural products and minerals were agreed to by the House conferees, with the exception of the amendment relating to "scoured wool." The House conferees refused to agree to exempting scoured wool from renegotiation.

Second. The House conferees also agreed to the Senate amendment providing a mandatory exemption for common carriers by railroad and public utilities.

Third. Under the House version of the bill the contract or subcontract of a contractor or subcontractor may be renegotiated if he has received or accrued within the fiscal year more than $100,000 in the aggregate from renegotiable contracts and subcontracts. The Senate version of the bill raised this limit to $500,000. Under the conference agreement the minimum is fixed at $250,000.

Fourth. The House conferees agreed to the amendment of the Senate relating to long-lived industrial equipment, such as machinery, tools, and so forth, which does not become a part of an end product or an article incorporated therein. However, certain clarifying amendments were adopted.

Fifth. The Senate amendment taking away the power of the Board to grant permissive exemptions in the case of individual contracts was not agreed to by the House conferees. We were forced to recede on this amendment.

Sixth. The amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas (McClellan) to limit renegotiation to contracts having a direct and immediate connection with the national defense was not agreed to by the House conferees. However, we were able to work out with the House group a compromise which will help the situation. Under the compromise, "any contract which does not have a direct and immediate connection with the national defense" is placed in the mandatory exemption group.

Seventh. We were not able to reach an agreement with the House conferees on Senate amendment 58, which provided a mandatory exemption from renegotiation in the case of a contract with a Department awarded as a result of competitive bidding for the construction of any building, structure, improvement, or facility. (But a compromise was ultimately worked out.)

Eighth. Another important Senate amendment relates to the composition of the Renegotiation Board. . . five members to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Under the Senate amendment the salaries were increased from the $12,500 figure under the House bill to $17,500 for the Chairman, and $15,000 for the other members. The House conferees agreed to the Senate amendment with an amendment requiring that those recommended to the Board must be from civilian life, and that the President shall designate a member to serve as Chairman.

Ninth. The Senate amendment providing a 1-year loss carry-over, with technical revisions, was agreed to by the House conferees, with an amendment to make it clear that the carry-over shall be permitted only to the extent that it did not result from gross inefficiency of the contractor or subcontractor.

Tenth. Other amendments of the Senate were adopted by the House conferees, including some with technical or clarifying amendments. Among them was an amendment requiring renegotiation to be on a consolidated basis, if the affiliated group so elects, an amendment requiring the elimination of intercompany sales, amendments including among the departments or agencies named in the bill, whose contracts are subject to renegotiation, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Canal Zone Government, the Panama Canal Company, and the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

The House conferees also agreed to:

The Senate amendments continuing the profit limitations of the Merchant Marine Act to contracts or subcontracts entered into prior to January 1, 1951.

XUM

The Senate amendment permitting the President to designate as departments, for purposes of renegotiation, only agencies having a direct and immediate connection with the national defense.

The Senate amendment requiring favorable recognition be given to efficiency in determining excessive profits was also agreed to by the House conferees.

The Senate amendment excluding from the definition of a subcontractor office supplies and limiting the power of the Board to define fiscal year in the case of a partnership.

Also, the Senate amendments relating to the collection of interest, the Senate amendment providing relief for assignee banks and other lending agencies, the Senate amendments requiring all excessive profits repaid to be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, exempting from renegotiation contracts or subcontracts with educational, charitable, religious organizations, and so forth, where the income from such contracts or subcontracts is not unrelated business income. If it is related business income, such contracts are subject to renegotiation as in other cases.

The Senate approved the conference report on March 12, the same day the House did. Both chambers registered their approval by voice votes. There was little debate. HR 1724 was sent to the White House where President Truman signed it into Public Law 9 on March 23.

GROUP STANDS

In addition to groups which registered their attitudes on renegotiation legislation by going before the Senate Finance Committee hearings, some organizations expressed opinions in their literature or at meetings.

The publication "Labor", for example, repeatedly charged that HR 1724 was shot through with "loopholes". The publication, representing some 15 railroad unions, specifically noted in its Feb. 24 issue that "the Senate Finance Committee put in clauses which would bar renegotiation of contracts on mine, oil and gas corporations."

The National Milk Producers Federation circulated to its members on Jan. 26 a statement that "the Federation supports the principle of renegotiating government contracts in order to prevent excessive profits. It has pointed out, however, that the dissimilarity between industrial and agricultural products requires an exception in the cases of contracts covering farm crops." The Federation pressed for the exception.

Participants in a seminar on renegotiation held by the American Management Association in New York on March 7 urged that provisions in the legislation be more clearly defined with respect to subcontractors. The participants asked for some limitation on the liability of subcontractors for mistakes the prime contractors might make in furnishing renegotiation data to the renegotiation authorities.

Contract Audit, Review

A bill (S 921) providing for auditing and examination by the Comptroller General of all contracts negotiated without advertising by the General Services Administration and the Defense Department, became law Oct. 31. It amended two laws — the 1949 Federal Property and Administrative Services Act and the 1947 Armed Services Procurement Act.

The measure was reported Aug. 1 by the Senate Expenditures Committee. On Aug. 9 it was passed by the Senate without objection.

Meanwhile, a similar bill (HR 2574) was reported Aug. 6 by the House Expenditures Committee. The House took up this bill Oct. 17. After accepting two amendments and rejecting two others, it passed the measure on a 101-20 standing vote. The House then took up the Senate bill, on voice votes amended it to contain House provisions, and passed it. The House then vacated the action by which it had passed its own bill.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Clarence G. Burton (D Va.) — Require expiration of the bill's provisions three years after the date of enactment. Voice vote.

Clare E. Hoffman (R Mich.)— Limit the contract review to "directly pertinent" instead of "any pertinent" records. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Ralph Harvey (R Ind.) — Exempt suppliers of prime contractors and subcontractors. First accepted on standing vote, 56-40, then rejected on teller vote, 69-83.

Committee amendment — Exempt foreign contractors when necessary to effect procurement. Standing, 38-61.

The Senate Oct. 18 accepted the House amendments to the bill, by voice vote. The measure was then sent to the President whose signature made it Public Law 245.

Aircraft Insurance

S 435—P.L. 47

A bill (S 435) to provide war risk insurance for U. S. commercial airlines engaged in overseas operations became law June 14, 1951. It amended the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938.

The measure authorized the Secretary of Commerce to extend insurance to airlines doing war connected work in other countries when private companies declined to assume the risk or if private coverage was not obtainable on reasonable terms.

Chairman Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.) of the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee was author of the measure. At committee hearings on the bill, former Rep. Robert Ramspeck (D Ga.) the executive vice president of the Air Transport Association and later chairman of the Civil Service Commission, and Thomas W. S. Davis, assistant Secretary of Commerce, testified Feb. 13 in the bill's favor. They estimated 20 U. S. airlines would be affected.

On Feb. 22, the bill was reported in the Senate which passed it by voice vote April 11. It was reported in the House May 17, and passed May 21 by unanimous consent. It was returned to the Senate May 23 where minor House amendments were agreed to in voice vote.

The President approved the measure June 14, making it Public Law 47.

Rent Control

S J RES 39 — P. L. 8

Summary — With existing federal rent controls due to expire March 31, unless communities voted on their own initiative to extend them for another six months, the 82nd Congress approved legislation to continue the mandatory rent ceilings for another 90 days, through June 30, 1951. The stop-gap legislation (S J Res 39) did not affect the "local option" feature of the existing rent control law, which permitted communities not only to continue controls once they had expired but also to decontrol local rents on community initiative.

Congress retained the right to end controls by concurrent resolution before June 30 if it wished. The legislation itself merely altered the expiration date in the existing rent control law, the Housing and Rent Act of 1947. (For background on 1950 extension of this law, see CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, page 662.)

The Senate passed S J Res 39 on March 13 by a voice vote. The House followed suit on March 19, also by a voice vote. President Truman signed the resolution — which gave it the force of law — on March 23.

SENATE

Committee

The Senate Banking and Currency Committee on Feb. 26 authorized its chairman, Burnet R. Maybank (D S. C.) to introduce a resolution (S J Res 39) calling for a flat 90-day extension of the federal rent control law. The law, which was due to expire March 31, would thus be continued until June 30. But rent-controlled communities would still be entitled to vote controls away before then. The expiring law had given them this right, which was unaffected by S J Res 39.

Introduction of the extension measure by the chairman, in effect, was equal to Committee approval of the legislation. Maybank said, however, that the Committee members reserved their rights to vote as they saw fit when the bill reached the Senate floor.

Maybank indicated any extension of ceilings beyond June 30 would be tied in with the Defense Production Act. He said that in this way rent control, along with the rest of the home-front mobilization program, would be brought under the "over - all control" of Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson.

Floor Action

The Senate debated S J Res 39 on March 13. Sen. Maybank, floor manager of the extension measure, brought out in the debate that more than 2.7 million dwelling units would be freed of rent control at the end of March if the law expired.

Sen. Harry P. Cain (R Wash.) argued against the extension bill, saying it would be a good idea to let rents seek their own level for 90 days. He said a "free market" in rents for that period would help Congress decide what kind of rent law should be enacted, if any.

The Senate approved the measure by voice vote.

HOUSE

Committee

The House Banking Committee's approval of a companion resolution (H J Res 196) to the Senate rent bill was blocked for 24 hours by Republicans, after Chairman Brent Spence (D Ky.) tried to get his group's immediate approval March 14, the day after the upper chamber passed its legislation.

The House Committee met briefly that day to hear Housing Expediter Tighe Woods urge passage of the stop-gap bill. Spence then tried to get a Committee vote, but Rep. Jesse P. Wolcott (R Mich.) objected to the fast action, and on the floor, House Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin, Jr. (R Mass.) objected the Banking Committee's request to meet while the House was in session.

Spence's efforts then were postponed until the next day. The 12-5 vote by which approval was granted March 15 was not disclosed.

Floor Action

The House acted on it March 19. Rep. Spence and Paul Brown (D Ga.), ranking majority member of the Banking and Currency Committee, led in arguing for passage of the extension measure. Spence warned the GOP against making a "political issue" of the measure. He told the Republicans they would "regret it" because "the people want it".

Brown said Congress could not justify their earlier vote for a 90-day extension of controls in the District of Columbia, where many Members live, unless they also voted for a general extension.

Republican opposition was spearheaded by Wolcott and Leo E. Allen (R Ill.). Wolcott maintained that there was no economic justification for continued rent control as long as it was "the studied policy of government to keep prices high." Allen insisted that failure of "93 per cent of the communities" covered by the existing control law to ask for an extension themselves constituted a "studied decision" to end controls.

One Republican voice was raised in support of extension by Jacob K. Javits (R N. Y.). "If we are going to have a price stabilization program," he said, "it has got to be all-inclusive and one element of an all-inclusive program is rents". He said he thought all but a "fractional minority" wanted a comprehensive price stabilization program.

Rep. Abraham J. Multer (D N. Y.) contended that rent control "is no longer a local issue. . .the defense mobilization effort has made it a national matter".

Rep. Wolcott moved to recommit the bill to the Committee, but was defeated on a voice vote. Then the House approved H J Res 196 by voice vote. A record vote was not sought.

In lieu of sending its measure to the Senate for concurrence, the House decided to substitute the Senate - passed version (S J Res 39) of the bill for the lower chamber's resolution. This was done by voice vote as well. The legislation was cleared to the White House, where President Truman signed it into Public Law 8 on March 23.

E Bond Retention

Summary — During 1951, some $1.1 billion worth of government savings bonds (series E) began to reach their 10-year maturity. Under existing law, holders of E bonds were required to cash them when they matured. Accordingly, money previously in bonds would become liquid cash, and it was felt this would contribute to inflationary pressures.

Congress therefore changed the law requiring holders of E bonds to cash them at maturity. By what the House Ways and Means Committee called "an important anti-inflationary measure", Congress enacted a new statute (HR 2268) permitting holders of the E bonds to retain them past the maturity date. To make retention attractive, the Congress authorized the Treasury to continue paying interest on the retained bonds, for an additional 10 years beyond the original maturity date.

The new law was passed by the House on Feb. 6 by voice vote. The Senate approved it without change on March 14, also by voice vote. The President signed HR 2268 on March 26.

Provisions — As enacted into law, HR 2268:

1. Authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to permit E bond holders "at their option" to "retain the matured bonds and earn interest upon the maturity values thereof for not more than ten years" longer. The existing average interest rate of 2.9 per cent on bonds held to maturity was not affected.

2. Preserved the right of E bond holders to accept cash for their bonds on the original maturity date, according to the original terms of the contract between the buyer and the government when the series E bonds were first issued.

3. Preserved the right of E bond holders to exchange their bonds on maturity for series G government savings bonds, large-denomination ones maturing in 12 years with a straight annual interest payment of 2.5 per cent.

4. Provided that series E bondholders be given the option of reporting interest for income-tax purposes annually or waiting until the end of the second 10-year redemption period to report the full amount of the interest accrued.

HOUSE

Committee

The House Ways and Means Committee in closed session Jan. 30 heard Secretary of the Treasury John Snyder testify in favor of legislation to permit and encourage retention of series E government bonds. Noting that some $35 billion worth of E bonds were outstanding, and that $1.1 billion worth would reach their 10-year maturity starting May 1, 1951, Snyder strongly supported the legislation as an anti-inflationary move.

The Secretary declared: "The aim (of the legislation) is not only to promote thrift, but to act as an anti-inflationary force and to help further distribution of the ownership of the public debt. . .It is our belief that the majority will desire to continue their investment in U. S. savings bonds."

The Committee favorably reported HR 2268 on Feb. 5. It said it believed "the proposed legislation will aid in the Government's anti-inflationary program and do so in a manner which best serves the convenience of the bondholder."

Floor Action

The House took up HR 2268 on Feb. 6. Discussing interest rates on E bonds retained for 10 years after the original maturity date, Ways and Means Committee Chairman Robert L. Doughton (D N.C.) told the House that the Treasury had proposed a 2.5 per cent interest rate for the first seven and one-half years. The overall 10-year rate would be 2.9 per cent compounded semi-annually, Doughton said.

GOP Resistance

The provision of the bill giving series E bondholders the option of reporting interest for income-tax purposes annually or at the end of the 10-year period was not entirely satisfactory to all Republicans.

Rep. Daniel A. Reed (R N.Y.) told the House: "One of the dangers" of this provision "is that people of small holdings of E bonds will not take advantage of paying their interest each year. They will come to a year when these E bonds finally mature and the interest on them has accumulated. Then, of course, it will throw many of the bondholders into a higher bracket. They will have lost much of the increment they thought they had gained."

Opposition to the entire bill came from Rep. Howard H. Buffett (R Neb.) who said, "we are asking people to make a contract with the government for another 10 years to replace a contract which in the last 10 years has lost 44 per cent of its value."

Buffett offered an amendment, ruled out of order, providing that the principal of the bond, when matured, be adjusted in accordance with the Bureau of Labor Statistics cost-of-living index during the second 10-year period.

The House then passed HR 2268 by a voice vote.

SENATE

The Senate Finance Committee studied the House-passed bill, and on March 13, formally recommended that the upper chamber endorse it without change. Accordingly, the Senate approved HR 2268 by a voice vote on March 14.

This action cleared the bill to the White House, where President Truman signed it into law on March 26.

Rail Safety Equipment

HR 4693—P.L. 194

A House measure (HR 4693) giving funds to purchase safety equipment priority over other financial obligations of bankrupt railroads became law Oct. 24.

The bill amended a subsection of the Bankruptcy Act to spell out the power of a bankruptcy court to permit the financing of safety equipment by a railroad which was in the process of reorganization.

Rep. Leonard W. Hall (R N.Y.) introduced the bill. It was designed to permit purchase of $6 million worth of safety devices by the bankrupt Long Island Railroad. Two tragic wrecks had occurred on the Long Island within a year.

A somewhat similar bill (HR 3751) was introduced earlier by Hall but there were objections to some of its provisions. These were not included in Hall's bill which became law.

The Judiciary Committee reported HR 4693 in the House July 30, 1951. The House passed the measure by unanimous consent Aug. 6. The Senate Judiciary Committee reported it in the upper chamber Sept. 17. The Senate Oct. 11 passed it by unanimous consent.

It became Public Law 194, upon President Truman's signature.

"Tidelands" Oil

Summary — The "tidelands" oil controversy between the states and the federal government was still raging after twelve years. The federal government sought "paramount" rights over the undersea lands, basing its claim on decisions of the Supreme Court that international law makes it impossible for states to "own" offshore areas.

Immediately at stake were the immensely rich oil lands under the ocean off the coasts of California, Texas and Louisiana. The coastal states said their claims to the offshore areas had been recognized and exercised since Colonial times, and sought Congressional action to reverse the High Court.

More than two dozen submerged lands bills, most of them described as "compromises," were introduced during 1951. HR 1089, introduced Jan. 8 by Rep. Ed Gossett (D Tex.) was approved, with amendments, by a House Judiciary Subcommittee on June 15, and retintroduced as a clean bill (HR 4484) that day. The full Judiciary Committee approved this bill and the House amended and passed the Submerged Lands Act July 30 by a 265-109 roll-call vote. (See page 540.) This bill would grant States ownership of lands to the three-mile limit and reserve control of the continental shelf beyond that mark to the federal government. From proceeds of its land, the federal government would pay 37 1/2 per cent to the states.

The Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee considered three plans while meeting on SJ Res 20, an interim measure introduced Jan. 18 by Sens. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) and Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.). On Oct. 19, it voted to table the legislation until January, 1952.

Administration spokesmen said President Truman would have vetoed either of these bills.

Background

For many years, ownership of the lands beneath offshore seas was not put to direct legal test since such areas were not considered to contain anything of national importance.

During the 1930s oilmen began taking millions of dollars worth of oil from undersea lands, from pools thought to be worth billions. Between 1939 and 1948 California, Texas and Louisiana leased oil rights to private companies which paid substantial sums for exploration privileges and in production royalties.

In 1933 several persons applied to the Department of Interior for leases on underwater oil lands off the California coast, arguing that the federal government, not the states, controlled them. On Dec. 22, 1933, Secretary of Interior Harold L. Ickes informed an applicant: "Title to the soil under the ocean within the three-mile limit is in the State of California, and the land may not be appropriated except by authority of the state." Later he told Congressional committees he had "inherited" this policy viewpoint and afterwards "began to feel doubt" whether the states actually had a clear claim. He urged President Roosevelt, in about 1938, to authorize a suit against California so that ownership and control of offshore oil lands could be decided by the courts.

California Suit

In the fall of 1945 President Truman, on recommendation of Ickes, ordered Attorney General Tom Clark to file suit in the Supreme Court over the California offshore oil lands. Congress quickly passed a quitclaim bill, (H J Res 225 of the 79th Congress, CQ Almanac, Vol. 2, 1946, pp 579, 593, 596) conceding title of the lands to the coastal states. The President vetoed this bill Aug. 1, 1946, saying that Congress was not an "appropriate forum" to decide Federal claims at the moment when the Justice Department suit against California, to establish the government's legal rights, was pending in the Supreme Court.

A motion to override, made the same day the Pfesident affixed his veto, failed to get the two-thirds majority in the House. The vote was 139 in favor and 95 opposed. Republicans cast 103 votes in favor of overriding and seven against. Thirty-six Democrats voted to override and 86 favored sustaining the veto.

On June 23, 1947, the Supreme Court decided against California and on Oct. 27, 1947, decreed that "The United States of America is . . . possessed of paramount rights in and full dominion and power over the lands, minerals and other things . . .lying seaward of the ordinary low-water mark on the coast of California, and outside the inland waters, extending seaward three nautical miles . . . ."

On April 30, 1948, the House passed another quitclaim bill (HR 5992, 80th Congress) by a 257 to 29 vote with 163 Republicans favoring it and seven opposed, and Democrats divided 94 in favor and 21 opposed. (CQ Almanac, Vol. IV, 1948, p. 333, 382.) The Senate Judiciary Committee approved the bill but it failed to reach the Senate floor.

Lousiana, Texas Suits

Suits claiming Louisiana and Texas submerged oil lands on somewhat different legal grounds were filed by the Department of Justice in 1948. On June 5, 1950, the Supreme Court ruled against these two states, too, handing down decrees identical with the California decree except that the "paramount rights" of the federal government were held to extend 27 miles seaward in the Louisiana case and to the outer edge of the continental shelf—70 to 125 miles—in the Texas case.

The Administration has requested statutory authority for the Department of Interior to lease offshore lands to private oilmen, but Congress has not complied. Instead the House tended strongly toward new quitclaim legislation "restoring" leasing power to the states. Republicans have had a record of party regularity in favor of the quitclaim; Democrats have been more evenly divided.

During 1951, 25 bills to end the dispute were introduced. The Administration endorsed an "interim" bill attempting to compromise the issues without yielding the principle of future federal control.

Meantime, oil was still being produced under original state leases, but money paid for exploration rights and as production royalties was held in special funds set up by agreement between the states and the federal government.

Exploration and development almost stopped off the Louisiana and Texas coasts, although work continued off California. New leases in the Gulf of Mexico were held up. Walter S. Hallanan, chairman of the Offshore Lessees Committee (representing oil companies with state leases), testified in February, 1951, that only four "geophysical crews" were operating in the Gulf of Mexico, whereas three and a half years earlier there were 48 such crews. In the summer of 1949, 26 drilling rigs, were in operation, but only five were operating at the time of the testimony.

HOUSE

"Tidelands" oil measures introduced in the House during 1951 totaled 20, of which 10 were introduced during the first three weeks of the year.

The Administration supported H J Res 131, interim bill for federal control, introduced by Judiciary Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.). Speaker of the House Sam Rayburn (D Tex.), on the other hand, expressed the hope that Congress would pass legislation giving a 10 1/2 mile offshore strip to the states. Explaining that the House previously had been waiting for Senate tideland action, Rayburn on May 30 said, "I think this is the psychological time for the House to move" to give states title to coastal oil lands.

Committee

A Judiciary Subcommittee held a one-day hearing June 6 on stop-gap legislation to assign control of the oil-rich tidelands until the dispute was settled.

Attorney General J. Howard McGrath and Secretary of Interior Oscar L. Chapman testified in support of federal control. They urged approval of Celler's H J Res 131, and argued that defense needs made federal control imperative. Celler warned that a state-control measure would be vetoed by the President.

After the hearing Rep. Ed Gossett (D Tex.) predicted that the Subcommittee would approve HR 1089, introduced by Rep. Francis E. Walter (D Pa.), which would give states title to the tidelands portions of the disputed lands. This the subcommittee did, on June 15, reportedly by a vote of 4 to 1. It had amended the legislation and, introduced it as a clean bill—HR 4484. The House Judiciary Committee approved HR 4484 on June 27, by an 18 to 6 vote. The bill was reported July 12.

The House Rules Committee on July 17 cleared this bill for House action, but placed a four-hour limit on debate. Reps. Gossett, Walter, and Edwin E. Willis (D La.) appeared to support HR 4484. Celler and Michael A. Feighan (D Ohio) supported H J Res 131, to continue operations under mineral leases issued by the states before Dec. 21, 1948, and that were in force June 5, 1950, with royalties to be paid to the U.S. Treasury.

Floor Action

There was considerable House discussion on July 27, when the resolution to consider HR 484 with a four-hour debate limitation was adopted on a 271-92 roll-call vote. (See page 540)

The bill itself was debated on July 27 and 30 and was passed by a 265-109 roll-call vote. Both parties favored the bill, Democrats 109-91 and Republicans 156-17. (See page 540.)

Provisions of Bill

As passed by the House, HR 4484 would:

Declare that "title to and ownership of the lands beneath navigable waters within the boundaries of the respective" states shall be established in the respective states.

Define "lands beneath navigable waters" to include land from the high tide mark seaward to the three-mile limit or to the limit which existed when the state entered the union (10 1/2 miles in the case of Texas) and land under inland navigable waters.

Specify that the federal government relinquish to the states all right and interest in these lands.

Permit states which have not done so to extend their boundaries to the three-mile limit or further if approved by Congress.

Vest in the federal government control over natural resources of the sea bed from the state boundary to the edge of the Continental Shelf.

Give each coastal state 37 1/2 per cent of all money received by the federal government for mineral leases in the undersea lands.

Attacks Court Decision

John E. Lyle Jr., (D Tex.) supported the measure, saying the argument that the Supreme Court's decision settled the issue was not valid for "only the Congress can and should settle the dispute."

James I. Dolliver (R Iowa) supported the bill because, "for a period of about 100 years it was generally understood and conceded that the title to submerged lands belonged to the states." Supreme Court decrees vesting control in the federal government, he said, should be "rectified."

Rep. Samuel W. Yorty (D Calif.) said that under the same principal that gave the federal government control of undersea lands, the federal government could claim the land under inland navigable waterways.

Celler led opposition to HR 4484 and declared it proposed to "give away a national heritage." He said that "no matter how you decorate it," the bill favored the oil interests. The federal government, he said, could not and would not lay claim to inland waterways or the tidelands proper. Federal rights, he continued, were based on "international law and foreign relations" and would not apply inland.

Willis claimed that the bill did not conflict with the Supreme Court decision for it asserted "the paramount rights of the federal government as to navigation and national defense."

Gossett, backing HR 4484, said it would be a "shameful thing if Congress subscribes to the theft" of these lands from the States.

Production Threatened?

Celler reported that the President would veto the bill if it were passed and said production of oil would remain stalled pending some final settlement. He offered a substitute to continue oil production for five years under federal supervision while a settlement was being worked out. His proposal was rejected 38-114 on a standing vote.

Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) offered a substitute which would vest control in the federal government and would put all revenue into a grant-in-aid fund for the nation's schools. The Mansfield substitute was ruled out on a point of order as being outside the scope of the pending bill.

All other major amendments were defeated by the bill's supporters. A motion by Celler to send the bill back to his Judiciary Committee was rejected on standing vote 63-171. The bill itself then was approved and sent to the Senate.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Byron G. Rogers (D Colo.)—Specify that the Act should not affect the Flood Control Act of 1944. Voice vote.

Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.)— Specify that all money received by the federal government under the Act be used to pay off the national debt. Voice.

Hamer H. Budge (R Idaho)—Specify that the Act not affect the Reclamation Act of 1939. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) — Substitute bill giving interim control of offshore lands to the federal government. Standing vote, 38-114.

Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) — Vest control in the federal government and put income from mineral leases into a fund for aid to schools. Ruled out on point of order.

CORRECTION—Vol. VII, 1951: Page 477
Col. 2, paragraph 2, lines 11 and 12 should be "vetoed by the President in 1946" (not 1949).

Mansfield — Stipulate that states have full title to inland waters and tidelands proper. Voice.

Clifford P. Case (R N.J.) — Confirm state title to inland navigable waterways. Standing, 45-121.

Case — Strike out provision giving states share in mineral lease income from undersea lands outside the three-mile limit or other state boundaries. Standing, 53-119.

Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.)— Amend second Case amendment to make clear that only the federal government shall receive money for oil leases outside the three-mile limit or other state boundaries. Standing, 64-125.

SENATE

Hearings

The Interior and Insular Affairs Committee started hearings Feb. 19 on interim legislation (S J Res. 20) introduced by Sens. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) and Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.). The bill was identical with H J Res. 131 and would have validated existing oil leases and permitted continued oil production pending determination in permanent law of exact boundaries and responsibilities for coastal lands beneath the marginal seas. The Supreme Court ruling against the states did not define these boundaries. The bill intended to provide for Interior Department control with the federal government receiving the proceeds and paying 37 1/2 per cent of them to the States.

First witness as the Committee opened hearings Feb. 19 was U. S. Solicitor General Philip B. Perlman, who gave his support to S J Res 20, the interim bill.

Everett W. Matton, assistant attorney general of California, said Feb. 20 his state officially opposed the bill in the belief it would make difficult, if not impossible, enactment of quitclaim legislation.

Former Secretary of Interior Harold L. Ickes, who first asserted the federal claim to offshore oil lands, scoffed at the description of the pending legislation as "interim." He said it would confirm state leases and "reward trespassers" and was "too damned interim." Profits from tidelands oil production, said Ickes, belong to all the people.

Burton K. Wheeler, former Democratic Senator from Montana, testified Feb. 22 that big oil companies have backed the fight against federal control. Wheeler was critical of both the interim bill and the measure to give states clear title to the land. He said if the bill passed and former Sen. Robert M. LaFollette (Prog. Wis.) were still alive, the investigation "would make the Teapot Dome sink into insignificance."

States Back Substitute

Before the hearings ended Feb. 22 representatives of California, Texas and Louisiana opposed the bill and urged the Committee to take up a substitute bill, S 940, introduced by 35 Senators — 15 Democrats and 20 Republicans — on Feb. 21. The new bill would have conferred on the states full title to underwater coastal oil lands and thus was similar to the measure vetoed by the President in 1949.

Perlman on March 28 registered the Justice Department's vigorous opposition to this new bill, saying it was based on "premises which ignore and contradict the holdings of the Supreme Court." He maintained that Congress did not have the power to decide that the States owned the land, as he said the bill stated, but he did not question the right of Congress to give the land to the states. Perlman contended, however, that Congress should not do so because the lands belong to all the people of the United States. Mastin G. White, Interior Department solicitor, also testified in opposition to the proposed transfer.

S 940 was turned down by the Committee on May 2, by a 6-7 vote. Voting for it were Sens. Guy Cordon, (R Ore.), Russell B. Long (D La.), George A. Smathers (D Fla.), Hugh Butler (R Neb.), Eugene D. Millikin (R Colo.) and George W. Malone (R Nev.)

Those opposed were James E. Murray (D Mont.), Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.), Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.), Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.), Zales N. Ecton (R Mont.), Arthur V. Watkins (R Utah), and Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.)

Favor State Control

The principle of state control was approved, however, on May 15 when the Committee voted 7 to 4 to accept an amendment to S J Res. 20 (the interim federal-control bill) substituting a proposal by Long. The substitute would have validated existing oil leases, placed in escrow the oil revenue collected by the states, allowed the Interior Secretary the right to approve or disapprove new leases, but continued state administration of the submerged oil lands.

O'Mahoney said those voting for the Long amendment were McFarland, Long, Smathers, Butler, Millikin, Malone, and Cordon. Opposing it were Murray, Anderson, Lehman and O'Mahoney.

On June 7 another amendment to S J Res 20 was offered. This one was introduced by Lister Hill (D Ala.) for himself and Sens. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), Wayne Morse (R Ore.), William Benton (D Conn.), Charles W. Tobey (R N. H.), Matthew M. Neely (D W. Va.), John J. Sparkman (D Ala.), Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.), Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), and Thomas C. Hennings, Jr. (D Mo.)

They proposed that revenue from offshore oil fields be dedicated to a program of federal aid to education, directed by a council consisting of 12 persons with experience in education or public administration, four to be appointed by the president of the Senate, four by the Speaker of the House, and four by the President.

Solicitor General Perlman Sept. 11 wrote Chairman O'Mahoney asking for immediate action on S J Res 20 and opposing the legislation to give the submerged oil lands to the states.

Sees "Compromise"

The Committee held a closed meeting Sept. 18, after which O'Mahoney said the House-passed bill (HR 4484) to grant tideland oil to the states had no chance of Senate passage at that time. He added, however, that the federal government "is willing to go a long way to compromise" state claims to tidelands oil. He indicated the compromise might include payment of substantial royalties to the states without surrender of federal sovereignty in the areas

On Oct. 19, the day before adjournment, the Senate Committee voted 7 to 6 to table submerged oil lands legislation until January. The motion was first defeated 6 to 7, but after some discussion of S J Res 20 and the House bill, HR 4484, Sen. Arthur V. Watkins (R Utah) changed his vote and the measure was tabled. Voting for postponement were Murray, Lehman, Ecton, Watkins, Malone, Millikin and Butler. Against postponement were Long, O'Mahoney, Anderson, Smathers, McFarland and Cordon.

Group Stands

A long list of state and federal government groups presented to Congress the arguments for or against federal control of the marginal seas.

In favor of federal control were spokesmen for the Defense, Interior and Justice Departments.

In favor of quitclaiming control to the states were many state groups—the Conference of Governors (by unanimous vote of 44 governors), the National Association of Attorneys General, the Council of State Governments, the United States Conference of Mayors, the American Association of Port Authorities, the Great Lakes Harbor Association, and many local Chambers of Commerce, school authorities and civic clubs.

The National Association of State Attorneys General was particularly active. "State title to all submerged lands are clouded by the federal claims and the (Supreme Court) decisions" the Association told Congress. "The federal claims affect the right of every state. . .to its lands, harbors, improvements, waters, fish, minerals an other resources in or under navigable waters and filled lands," it said.

The Board of Harbor Commissioners of Long Beach, Calif., issued a pamphlet attacking federal claims to the "water rights of farmers" in the Fallbrook, Calif., area. These claims, said the Long Beach commissioners, were based on the same legal theory that was decisive in the tidelands decisions — the "paramount power" of the government in the interests of "national defense."

Officials of inland states with large oil reserves, as well as with other mineral resources, speculated on the possible long - range effects of a successful federal claim to offshore oil. Persons supporting the federal government, however, insisted that questions involving mineral rights in inland waters or "fast land" were academic.

GOP Platform

The Republican platform in 1948 flatly endorsed a quitclaim bill: "We favor restoration to the states of their historic rights to the tide and submerged lands, tributory waters, lakes and streams."

The Democratic platform did not include a stand on tidelands oil.

The American Bar Association and the State Bar Associations of California, Texas, Massachusetts and Oklahoma favored state control.

So did, among others the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, the Southern States Industrial Council, National Reclamation Association, National Water Conservation Conference, and the American Title Association.

The House of Representatives of the Texas Legislature passed a resolution Jan. 16, 1951, asking Texas Congressmen to institute impeachment proceedings against Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas, who wrote the majority opinion in the Texas case. Douglas, the resolution said, "is responsible for the State of Texas being denied a fair and impartial trial. . .and. . .caused three other members of the Supreme Court . . .to ignore a solemn contract" between the United States and "another nation" (Texas).

Change of Mind

At least one group listed by the House Judiciary Committee as favoring a quitclaim bill changed its mind. Walter S. Hallanan, chairman of the Offshore Lessees Committee, endorsed the O'Mahoney resolution for interim federal control, saying that the oil industry previously had favored state operation of offshore lands, but because new explorations were checked by the dispute in Congress, and because of the "mandate of the Supreme Court" the oil industry now wanted validation of existing leases and interim federal control of new leases as "the only way out."

On the side of federal control were the National Grange, which "has for years supported the contention that the submerged offshore lands. . . belong to the national government," and the National Farmers Union president, James G. Patton, who in 1950 called the quitclaim bills "a threat to the national security". Patton also said that such bills went against a "federal policy" of preventing "undue concentration. . .of natural resources in a few hands," and that they favored the "monopolistic hold of the major oil companies" at the expense of farmer oil cooperatives.

The CIO in its 1950 convention called for defeat of "special interest raids" such as "attempts to remove submerged oil resources from federal control."

States' "Tidelands" Roles

The "tidelands" or submerged oil lands controversy has involved most of the states. This table shows the stands and claims of the states; their reserves of all oil, "submerged" lands and otherwise, and their rank in production of crude (as of Jan. 1, 1950.) Checks in the first column indicate states whose attorneys general have supported "state rights" in the dispute.

1951 "Tidelands" Bills

Here is a list with names of sponsors and a brief summary of provisions, of the submerged lands bills introduced during 1951. All of the bills except those on which other action is indicated still were in the hands of committees at the close of the first session of the 82nd Congress.

HOUSE BILLS

Bill No.	Introduced	Provisions
HR 58	Jan. 3 by Clyde Doyle, (D Calif.)	Place title in states up to 3 miles; in federal gov't. beyond; but protect existing commitments made by States. Federal gov't. to pay states 37 1/2 per cent of all money rec'd for leases.
HR 266	Jan. 3 by Norris Poulson (R Calif.)	Release to states all federal interest in lands beneath tidewaters and navigable waters.
HT 415	Jan. 3 by Thomas H. Werdel (R Calif.)	Same as HR 266.
HR 1022	Jan. 3 by Robert Hale (R Maine)	Release to states all federal interest in lands beneath navigable waters.

Bill No.	Introduced	Provisions
HR 1089	Jan. 8 by Francis E. Walter (D Pa.)	Same as HR 58. Amended and approved by Judiciary Subcommitte June 15 and clean bill (HR 4484, see below) introduced.
HR 1280	Jan. 9 by Edwin E. Willis (D La.)	Same as HR 58.
HR 1310	Jan. 12 by Hubert B. Scudder (R Calif.)	Same as HR 266.
HR 1364	Jan. 12 by Gordon L. McDonough (R Calif.)	Same as HR 266.
HR 1523	Jan. 15 by Hale Boggs (D La.)	Same as HR 1022.
HR 1934	Jan. 23 by Ernest K. Bramblett (R Calif.)	Release to states all federal interest in lands beneath tidewaters and navigable waters, but reserve to federal government interest in continental shelf beyond state limits.
HR 3300	Mar. 19 by John E. Rankin (D Miss.)	Same as HR 266.
HR 3936	May 2 by Patrick J. Hillings (R Calif.)	Same as HR 266.
HR 4147	May 17 by Olin E. Teague (D Tex.)	Same as HR 1934.
HR 4196	May 22 by Omar Burleson (D Tex.)	Same as HR 1934.
HR 4484	June 15 by Francis E. Walter (D Pa.)	Place title in states or persons up to three miles; in federal government beyond; but protect existing commitments made by states. Federal government to pay to states 37 1/2 per cent of all money received for leases.
HR 4530	June 20 by Robert L. Ramsay (D W. Va.)	Continue operations of certain leases already in force but with money to be paid to federal government; other lands to be opened for releasing to highest bidder for up to five years. 37 1/2 per cent of all money received to be paid by federal government to states.
H J Res 131	Jan. 24 by Emanuel Celler (D N. Y.)	Same as HR 4530.
HJ Res 209	Mar. 19 by Carl Hinshaw (R Calif.)	Define boundaries of United States; disclaim federal right or interest in submerged lands, with quitclaim to states.
HJ Res 274	June 21 by Celler	Similar to HR 4530. Rejected by Committee on Judiciary July 12.
H Res 296	July 19 by Mike Mansfield (D Mont.)	Provide that royalties from leases of continental shelf submerged lands be used for grants-in-aid to education.

Senate Bills

SJ Res 20	Jan. 18 by Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) and Clinton P. Anderson (D N. M.)	Interim federal control bill, as amended by committee, same as HR 4530. Committee of Interior and Insular Affairs. Oct. 19 voted to table until January, 1952.
S 140	Jan. 8 by William Langer (R N. D.)	Create a Federal Waterlands Reserve consisting of lands one mile seaward of the mean low tide line and give federal government all proceeds from these lands. Convey to States lands within one mile limit. Provided that federal receipts from these lands or $500 million (whichever is lower) be used for public schools.
S 940	Feb. 21 by Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) and *others.	Same as HR 1022. Rejected by Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs May 20.
S 1080	Mar. 9 by Francis Case (R S.D.)	Confirm States rights up to three miles or to state's boundaries when it was admitted to Union; create Federal Waterlands Reserve of continental shelf beyond state limits, and affirms federal rights to these. Education provisions similar to S 140.
S-1540	May 23 by Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) and Clinton P. Anderson (D N. M.)	Recognize states' contracts for docks, piers and other structures, but vests authority for oil, gas, and other minerals in submerged coastal lands in Chief of Army Engineers. Confirm navigable water lands to states.

St. Lawrence Seaway

Summary—Ten very similar measures were introduced in the House and one in the Senate to implement an agreement between the United States and Canada for the joint construction of a deep-water channel through the St. Lawrence river from the Great Lakes to the Atlantic Ocean.

The President, Secretary of Defense, Chairman of the Munitions Board, Defense Mobilizer, Secretary of Interior, Secretary of State, and Secretary of Commerce all urged immediate approval. The House Public Works Commitee conducted extensive hearings. Railroad interests, representatives from Atlantic and Gulf ports fearing resultant competition, and the United Mine Workers were among opponents. The bills finally were tabled by the House until at least January. The Senate did not even refer the matter to a subcommittee for study in 1951.

Provisions — HR 2536, HJ Res 2, HJ Res 3, HJ Res 4, HJ Res 15, HJ Res 102, HJ Res 122, HJ Res 159, and SJ Res 27 differed only slighly. All provided for:

Approval of most articles of an agreement between the governments of Canada and the United States dated March 19, 1941.

The joint development of the Great Lakes - St. Lawrence Basin on a self-liquidating basis by fair toll charges of not more than $1.25 per short ton.

A 27 - foot channel.

A St. Lawrence Advisory Commission to co-operate with Canadian representatives on administrative, technical and economic aspects of the toll system.

Transfer to New York of power facilities to be constructed on the U.S. side of the International Rapids.

HJ Res 288 and HJ Res 337 required liquidation of the investment over a 50 - year period and omitted the authorization to transfer the International Rapids power facilities to New York.

Background — While the St. Lawrence River proper rises in Lake Ontario, its ultimate source is at the head of the St. Louis river at the extreme end of Lake Superior, 1,870 miles from the St. Lawrence Gulf. Thus with the Great Lakes included the river drains a valley of 309,500 square miles. Proposals to make it navigable its full distance have been advanced over 100 years. At first the project was considered only as an aid to shipping, but in later years it became important as a potential source of cheap hydro - electric power.

As early as 1826 the improvement of the ship channel between Montreal and Quebec was being considered by the assembly of Lower Canada. By 1932 there was a 32.5 foot draft all the way to Montreal, 1,000 miles from the Atlantic. Between Ogdensburg, New York, and Lake Superior the navigation draft is 25 foot downbound and 21 foot upbound.

But in the 114 miles from Ogdensburg to Montreal the St. Lawrence drops 224 feet. A series of rapids were by - passed by 43 - foot wide canals having a minimum draft of only 14 feet. At least a 27 - foot draft channel had been recommended by all commissions studying the problem from 1897 on.

Popular Demand

Vigorous modern demands for deep-water construction rose in the early 1890's. In September, 1895, the Inland Deep Waterways Association met for the first time to discuss the practicability of the Seaway. Following the meeting the President of the United States, Grover Cleveland, and the government of Canada appointed the Deep Waterways Commission to report on all possible waterways which might connect the Great Lakes and the Atlantic Ocean.

On Jan. 8, 1897, the Commission reported the feasibility of the St. Lawrence construction and recommended the completion of the entire system as quickly as proper projects could be matured.

In 1902 Congress asked the President to invite the government of Great Britain to join in the formation of an International Waterways Commission to study the problem, and in 1921 the joint commission reported specific proposals. Through the years further studies and reports developed the plan, which was endorsed by all Presidents from Harding on.

Representatives of the U.S. and Canada prepared a treaty for the project in 1932, but the Senate voted 46 for and 42 against ratification, failing to give the two - thirds majority necessary for treaties.

Seaway Bills Fail

Discussions continued, and in March, 1941, another agreement was prepared by representatives of the two countries. This called for completion by both countries of their respective portions of the project by December, 1948, development of hydro-electric works at International Rapids with each country to utilize one-half of the available water, and regulation of the water levels and water diversions from the Great Lakes. This agreement was to require only a simple majority vote in the House and Senate for passage, and was the subject of bills during every subsequent Congress, but reached floor votes only twice.

In December, 1944, a Senate attempt to attach a St. Lawrence amendment to the Rivers and Harbors bill was defeated by a vote of 25 to 56; and in Feb., 1948, the Senate voted to return a resolution to Committee by a 57 to 30 vote. (CQ Almanac, Vol. IV, 1948, p. 281.).

The total cost to Canada and the United States of the remaining works was estimated by the U.S. Corps of Engineers in February, 1951, at $818,063,000 of which the U.S. share was $566,794,000. The New York share of this for the power project was $192,493,000. The U.S. share was greater than Canada's because Canada received credit for work she had completed already.

At a conference attended by five Congressmen, President Truman Jan. 26 urged construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project. The conferees said the President sought to give new impetus to the project as a security measure and as a means of tapping Labrador iron ore reserves that would be needed in a decade.

HOUSE

Hearings

Reps. Clarence E. Kilburn (R N.Y.) John D. Dingell (D Mich.), John A. Blatnik (D Minn.), George A. Dondero (R Mich.), Clement J. Zablocki (D Wis.), George D. O'Brien (D Mich.) Charles E. Potter (R Mich.), and Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., (D. N.Y.) had introduced HJ Res. 2, 3, 4, 15, 102, 122, 159 and HR 2536 respectively by February 20 when the House Public Works Committee opened 1951 public hearings on the long - disputed St. Lawrence Seaway.

Four Cabinet officials, Secretary of State Dean Acheson, Secretary of Defense George C. Marshall, Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer, and Secretary of the Interior Oscar L. Chapman, as well as Charles E. Wilson, Director of Defense Mobilization, supported the $800 million project.

Asserting the seaway was needed at once, Sawyer testified that should war come, "only" through the St. Lawrence project could the nation be assured an adquate supply of iron ore. The Commerce chief said the seaway had a "solid commercial basis" and the net cost to the government "over the span of a generation or so" would "be zero".

Acheson described the proposed development as a matter of "deeper urgency" than had existed before for the joint defense of the U.S. and Canada.

Dingell, author of HJ Res 3, also spoke on behalf of the proposed program.

Marshall, Wilson Testify

Marshall sent a statement Feb. 1, that his Department, including the Joint Chiefs of Staff, was fully behind the legislation for its "advantages to national defense". Wilson termed the project both "vital" and "urgent." He said planned expansion of the steel industry to 130 million ingot tons a year by 1960 required bringing in iron ores which could be obtained from Labrador to keep up capacity operation.

Chapman declared Feb. 22 that unless the seaway were built "I do not see how we will be able to meet our national iron ore requirements five years from now." He recommended that construction start immediately and the "highest priority" be given to the project. On Feb. 23 he testified that it would be "uneconomic and wasteful" to attempt to move the Labrador ore over the existing all-Canadian 14 - foot channel of the St. Lawrence.

Also appearing Feb. 23, Vice Admiral Edward L. Cochrane, Federal Maritime Administrator, testified that 85 per cent of the American merchant fleet would be able to use the proposed seaway.

Maj. Gen. Lewis Pick chief of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, testified Feb. 26 that estimates of the total project cost had risen $16 million in two years, but that the cost to the U.S.actually would be less in 1951 than was expected in 1948. Whereas the 1948 cost estimate of $802 million had increased to $818 million, Pick explained, the American share, thought in 1948 to be $573 million, was in 1951 reduced to $566 million. Canada would pay.

Chairman Mon C. Wallgren of the Federal Power Commission, Feb. 27 said the power portion of the project would produce electricity "so low in cost that a market is assured." Roger B. McWhorter, FPC chief engineer, testified that the St. Lawrence River provided an opportunity for development of hydroelectric power at a cost lower than anywhere else in North America.

Grain Transport Need

Feb. 28, John E. Burton, chairman of the New York State Power Authority, described the Authority as "100 per cent" for the seaway. Clyde T. Ellis, executive manager of the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association March 1 urged approval of the seaway and power project, saying the power development was needed critically.

J. T. Sanders for the National Grange, and Benton J. Stong for the National Farmers Union testified March 1 that the seaway was needed for grain transportation because of the freight car shortage. Roy F. Hendrickson of the National Federation of Grain Cooperatives endorsed the development March 2.

Norman W. Foy, sales manager of Republic Steel Corporation, said March 2 the seaway was needed as a lifeline between Labrador iron ores and steel producing facilities in the United States, which are short of ore supplies.

On March 5, George M. Humphrey, president of the M. A. Hanna Company, the firm now developing huge iron ore deposits in Labrador, called early completion "a vital necessity".

Reps. John E. Rankin (D Miss.), Roosevelt (D N.Y.) and Wingate H. Lucas (D Tex.), and Sen. Herbert H. Lehman (D-N.Y.) also testified March 6 in support of the project.

Railroads Oppose Project

Gregory S. Prince, assistant general counsel of the Association of American Railroads, testified four days against the seaway. Backers of the projects had "utterly failed" to prove that the water and power projects were economically justified, he said. In committee testimony April 2 - 5, Prince contended that (1) the seaway would be "subsidized competition" for railroads, (2) the project was not urgently needed for national defense, (3) it would be detrimental to the national economy, and (4) vulnerable to enemy attack, (5) it was not needed for importation of Labrador iron ore because domestic reserves were ample, (6) the ultimate cost would be far in excess of estimates, (7) and there was no assurance the seaway would be self-liquidating.

Brig. Gen. W. F. Heavey, retired general manager of the Port of Houston, Tex., declared April 12 that the project could not be justified economically. Fifteen years earlier, as assistant to the army's division engineer at Cleveland, Heavey worked on the engineering and economic phases of the project.

"We are. . .opposed to the construction of this project insofar as navigation is concerned," Heavey testified. "We have invested millions" in Texas coast port facilities which serve the midwest, he added. Heavey contended the seaway with the proposed 27-foot channel would be barely deep enough to justify its construction from an economic standpoint.

Rep. Cleveland M. Bailey (D W. Va.) said April 13 that the project would gravely injure the economy of his state. "Coal is King in West Virginia," he said, and if the seaway were built, foreign fuel oil would tend to drive coal from Great Lakes markets, which get 84 per cent of West Virginia coal production.

A. Brown Moore, a member of the Commission Counsel for New Orleans asserted that the seaway would adversely affect the economy of his city and the Mississippi valley. Questioned by Dondero, Brown admitted he favored the $100 million federal tidewater channel to be built from New Orleans as a short cut to the Gulf. Ben J. Williams, of the New Orleans Chamber of Commerce, also appeared in opposition to the seaway.

Sen. Edward J. Thye (R Minn.) April 17 called the St. Lawrence project the "missing link" needed to transport newly found iron ore from Labrador to U.S. steel mills.

Calls Plan "Monstrosity"

The project was called a "monstrosity" by Thomas Kennedy, United Mine Workers vice president, testifying April 18. The seaway, he charged, was being "promoted" for the "special privilege" competitive advantage of five or six big steel companies.

Building the seaway would necessitate deepening Great Lakes harbors with an enormous additional cost, R. G. Breene, Dayton consulting engineer, said April 19. He was hired by the St. Lawrence Project Conference, which opposes the seaway, to check the cost of deepening the harbors.

In testimony April 23, Frazer A. Bailey, president of the National Federation of American Shipping, said only 4 per cent of the American merchant fleet could operate fully loaded through the proposed 27-foot channel. Smaller foreign vessels would be the main users, he asserted.

William F. Giesen of the Maritime Association of the Port of New York told the Committee "We just can't believe that any scheme that has a seven-month-a-year top operating potential and that even remotely threatens to ruin our existing transportation facilities serving us regularly 12 months out of the year can be in the best interests of the nation as a whole."

The seaway was opposed April 25 by the Utility Workers Union of America (CIO). Its parent organization, the CIO, favored the St. Lawrence project. The utility workers union filed a written statement of its position and protested to the Committee that it was not alloted time to give oral testimony.

Other witnesses in opposition testified April 25. Also on that day, Rep. James E. Van Zandt (R Pa.) told the House that "it is rumored that Army engineers have been roaming the hallways of Congress in a frantic effort to garner support for the already discredited St. Lawrence Seaway."

On April 30 the Committee concluded their hearings with testimony in opposition from Reps. Donald L. O'Toole (D N.Y.), John C. Butler (R N.Y.), Edmund P. Radwan (R N.Y.), Van Zandt, Daniel J. Flood (D Pa.), and Clark W. Thompson (D Tex.); and favorable testimony from Rep. Walter H. Judd (R Minn.).

Committee

After concluding hearings the Committee decided on May 1 to fly over the route of the proposed seaway before acting on authorizing legislation. The House on May 21 unanimously approved a resolution (H Res 158) authorizing this on-the-spot survey, which several Committee Members conducted in June.

After two stormy executive sessions July 11 and 12 the Committee reportedly rejected by a 12-15 vote a motion to table the legislation and one to adjourn consideration of the measures.

A new resolution (H J Res 288) requiring liquidation of the investment over a 50-year period and omitting the authorization for transfer of power facilities to New York was introduced July 11 by Rep. Henry D. Larcade, Jr., (D La.). This resolution was immediately shelved, however, when the Committee agreed July 17 that only H J Res 4 and H J. Res 15 were before them.

On July 18, H J Res 15 was shelved, and Committee debate was limited to H J Res 4. Most controversy centered on the proposal to transfer to New York the planned International Rapids power facilities. Finally on July 26 the Committee tabled H J Res 4 for the session, by a 15 - 12 vote.

Ten Republicans and five Democrats voted to table: Democrats were Tom Pickett, (Tex.), George H. Fallon (Md.), T. Vincent Quinn (N.Y.), John J. Dempsey (N.M.), John C. Watts (Ky.); and Republicans Homer D. Angell (Ore.), J. Harry McGregor (Ohio), James C. Auchincloss (N.J.), J. Glenn Beall (Md.), Charles W. Vursell (Ill.), Hubert B. Scudder (Calif.), Myron V. George (Kan.), William G. Bray (Ind.), Howard H. Baker (Tenn.) and John T. Wood (Idaho).

Ten Democrats and two Republicans voted against tabling: The Democrats were Chairman Charles A. Buckley (N.Y.), Larcade, Clifford Davis (Tenn.), James W. Trimble (Ark.), John C. Kluczynski (Ill.), Thaddeus M. Machrowicz (Mich.), Frank E. Smith (Miss.), Blatnik, Robert E. Jones, Jr. (Ala.), Clare Magee (Mo.). Republicans were Dondero and Russell V. Mack (Wash.).

The Committee did nothing more until October. Blatnik Oct. 1 introduced H J Res 337 which omitted the reference to transfer of power facilities and which like H J Res 288 required amortization of the investment over a 50-year period. The Committee conducted hearings Oct. 8, 9 and 10, with Prince of the Association of American Railroads, Bailey of the National Federation of American Shipping, and Kennedy of the United Mine Workers again opposing the project and chief of Army Engineers Lewis A. Pick favoring the construction.

On Oct. 11 Committee Chairman Buckley announced no further meetings on the St. Lawrence Seaway legislation would be called until after Jan. 1, 1952.

SENATE

When Sen. Theodore Francis Green (D R.I.) introduced S J Res 27 on Feb. 1 it was referred to the Foreign Relations Committee. The Senate Committee had taken no action on the St. Lawrence question since 1947, and in 1951 the measure was not even referred to a subcommittee for study.

Canada Makes Offer

Meantime, Canada's Prime Minister, Louis St. Laurent, after a September 28 consultation with President Truman announced his government's willingness to undertake the project alone. Mr. Truman expressed strong preference for joint development, but said that unless Congress assured an early commencement of the work he would support action by the Dominion alone as "second best." Canada's Minister of External Affairs, Lester E. Pearson, told the House of Commons Oct. 23 that Canada expected soon "to receive from the United States Government" the cooperation necessary to allow it to go ahead alone with construction of the navigation project. While there was no legal bar to Canada's constructing canals on its side of the St. Lawrence, dams for power development would necessarily abut American soil at one end and could not be constructed without U.S. permission.

Central Arizona Project

Summary — A bill (S 75) to authorize construction of the Central Arizona Water and Power Project was approved by the Senate June 5. But in the House the Senate's $788 million authorization measure and a similar House bill (HR 1500) were shelved by the Interior Committee.

Involving a quarter-century dispute between California and Arizona over the right to use Colorado River water, the project was one of the most controversial in the West.

Provisions — The bill would authorize construction of a multi - purpose project known as the Bridge Canyon project which includes a dam and other works on the Colorado River in northwestern Arizona, works in central Arizona, and a dam and works in New Mexico.

The primary purpose would be to provide irrigation water for about 725,000 acres in Arizona and New Mexico and to furnish an installed capacity of approximately 770,100 kilowatts of power for domestic, commercial and pumping purposes.

Construction would be held up until after the existing national emergency.

Background — A similar bill was passed by the Senate in the 81st Congress. It provided for the construction of seven dams and reservoirs, power lines and other works on the Colorado River in central and northwestern Arizona and New Mexico. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, pp. 659, 660).

SENATE

The legislation was introduced Jan. 8 by Sens. Carl Hayden (D Ariz.) and Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.) The Interior Commitee voted Jan. 30 to approve the measure but did not report it out until March 12.

The Committee report said a large portion of Arizona's best farm land could not be sustained without water from the planned project. The report also said income from power sales at the project's dams would help repay the costs. Estimates of witnesses as to the ultimate expense varied from $788 million to $2 billion.

Senate passage of the measure was on a 50 to 28 roll - call vote. (For voting, see page 532.)

Enactment of the bill, McFarland contended, was necessary so the Supreme Court could decide on distribution of Colorado River water.

California's William F. Knowland (R) and Richard M. Nixon (R) argued that the water rights dispute should have been settled before the project was given the green light. But the Senate rejected by a 32 to 48 roll call their amendment authorizing a court contest while withholding authorization of the construction itself.

The Senate accepted by voice vote an amendment by the bill's sponsors that would delay the start of actual construction until after the national emergency had ended.

Before the final vote the Senate rejected on a 30 to 51 roll call a recommittal motion by Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.), who wanted to send the bill back to committee.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.) and Carl Hayden (D Ariz.) — Postpone construction until after the present national emergency. Voice vote.

Arthur V. Watkins (R Utah) — Provide for repayment to the government of the cost of water used for irrigation. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

William F. Knowland (R Calif.), and Richard M. Nixon (R Calif.) — Require farmers to pay at least 25 per cent of the cost of the irrigation features of the project. Roll - call vote, 26 to 54.

Knowland and Nixon — Authorize court litigation without authorizing the project. Roll call, 32 to 48.

HOUSE

The House Interior Committee opened hearings Feb. 27 on Rep. John R. Murdock's (D Ariz.) bill (HR 1500) to authorize construction of the vast Central Arizona project. Murdock's bill was similar to the Senate measure (S 75). On April 18 the Committee voted to delay action on the House measure pending settlement of disputed water right claims in the lower Colorado River basin. The committee similarly shelved the Senate bill on Oct. 10.

Baler Twine Imports

Summary — A bill (HR 1005) amending the Tariff Act of 1930 to provide for the free importation of baler twine was passed by the House on Sept. 14, 1951, by roll-call vote, 210-41. The Senate, on call of calendar, passed the bill on a voice vote. President Truman signed it on Oct. 25, and it became Public Law 219.

Rep. John D. Dingell (D Mich.) introduced HR 1005 on Jan. 8. Sens. Hugh Butler (R Neb.) and Edward J. Thye (R Minn.) introduced S 499, a similar bill, on Jan. 15. The purpose of these bills was to rescind the 15 per cent duty on baler twine and give it the same import status as binder twine, which has been duty-free since 1896.

The Senate during consideration of HR 3336, copper duty suspension bill, included an amendment by Butler and Thye to suspend the baler twine duty, but it was deleted in conference.

HOUSE

Committee

The Ways and Means Committee held hearings on HR 1005 July 16, 17, 23 and 24. Farm witnesses favored the bill. They said there was an acute shortage of baler twine in the United States, and that black markets were developing in some areas. Twine available was priced about 40 per cent higher than last year, they declared. Presenting arguments for the bill were the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives, American Farm Bureau Federation, National Farmers Union and National Grange. Also favoring the bill was the Brantford Cordage Company of Ontario, Canada.

Opposing the bill was the Cordage Institute, representing 23 cordage mills The Institute contended that farmers would lose more through the destruction of the domestic industry than they would gain in lower prices if the duty were set aside. The American Prison Association also opposed the suspension.

The Department of Agriculture made a favorable report on the proposal. The Munitions Board opposed elmination of the duty.

The Committee favorably reported the bill on July 27. Minority views were presented by eight Republican Members:

Roy O. Woodruff (Mich.), Thomas A. Jenkins (Ohio), Richard M. Simpson (Pa.), Robert W. Kean (N.J.), Noah M. Mason (Ill.), Thomas E. Martin (Iowa), and John W. Byrnes (Wis.)

Floor Action

The House debated the bill on Sept. 13 and 14. In the course of debate, Dingell, sponsor of the bill told members that farmers are facing a shortage of baling twine at a time when it is most needed for harvesting. "The only way to relieve the situation now facing the farmer," he added, "is to enact this bill and assure him an adequate supply of baler twine."

Opponenets charged those supporting the bill actually were supporting special interest groups.

Simpson ofered an amendment Sept. 13 to provide certain specifications for baler twine in regard to composition, length and usage. He modified some of the specifications on Sept. 14, but Dingell objected to Simpson's request for the modifications. Byrnes then offered a substitute amendment which embodied the changes Simpson had tried to put in his original amendment. The House rejected both the Byrnes and Simpson amdnements. Dingell said that such amendments would only "circumvent the intent and purposes of the bill."

The House rejected a recommittal motion by Reed, who proposed without a record vote, to send the bill back to committee with instructions to insist on an amendment by John Taber (R N.Y.) which the House had rejected earlier. The Taber amendment would have set a termination date of March 1, 1953, for the legislation.

On Sept. 14 the bill was approved by a 210-41 roll-call vote. It contained no termination date. (See page 542.)

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Edwin Arthur Hall (R N.Y.)—Direct that the National Production Authority take all possible steps to allocate from domestic supplies enough baling twine to meet the needs of farmers for 1951 and subsequent emergencies. Ruled out on point of order by Jere Cooper (D Tenn.)

Richard M. Simpson (R Pa.)—Provide definition of baler twine which would include certain specifications with regard to composition, length, and use. Voice vote.

John W. Byrnes (R Wis.)—Provide definition of baler twine with modifications in regard to length and usage specifications. Standing, 57-88.

John Taber (R N.Y.)—Terminate legislation March 1, 1953. Standing, 47-89.

SENATE

The Finance Committee on Oct. 19, in executive session, voted to report HR 1005 without amendment.

On October 20, on call of the calendar, the Senate after brief debate passed the bill by voice vote.

President Truman signed HR 1005 on Oct. 25, and it became Public Law 219.

Air Line Subsidies

Summary — Once again Congress studied the separation of mail pay and subsidies to air lines, but as in 1949 and 1950, no legislation on the subject became law in 1951.

The Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee conducted hearings during June and July at which Government and air line witnesses generally supported the separation of the two kinds of payments.

The Committee approved a bill (S 436) to separate the payments on Aug. 8, and reported it Aug. 9. The Senate amended and passed it Sept. 15.

The House did not act on this bill during the first session.

Provsions — As passed by the Senate the bill would:

Separate mail pay and subsidies to domestic air lines, beginning July 1, 1952.

Provide a new scale of rates for payments made to domestic air lines for carrying air mail. These would range from 45 cents to $1.80 a ton mile.

Divide domestic air lines into five classes on the basis of types of communities served, volume and distance of air mail carried and the route patterns flown.

Authorize the Civil Aeronautics Board to revise domestic mail rates on the basis of actual costs plus a fair return under "honest, economical and efficient management" of the air lines.

Authorize the Postmaster General to determine rates for air lines operating overseas, beginning July 1, 1953, specifying that they should not exceed the maximum rate established by the Universal Postal Union Convention (an international group fixing postal charges among the various nations), and should not be less than the lowest rate which the United States paid foreign air lines to carry mail abroad.

Background — In 1949 the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee conducted extensive hearings on air line finances and government subsidies, but took no action on a bill introduced by Committee Chairman Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.) to separate the air mail and subsidy payments to the lines. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, 1949, pp. 741, 742).

The next year, 1950, the House passed a bill to have the Civil Aeronautics Board list separately the money it paid to air lines for carrying mail and its subsidy payments, so that the Post Office could pay the mail portion. The Senate had continued its general study into January, but did not report a bill. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, pp. 641, 642).

SENATE

Hearings

Hearings on legislation (S 436, 1137, 1657, 1756, 1757 and 1870) to separate subsidies from payments to air lines for hauling mail began June 21 with an analysis of a report on the subsidy separation problem prepared for the committee by a law firm.

Later, J. Weldon Jones of the Budget Bureau, and Stuart Tipton, general counsel of the Air Transport Association, testified June 26 at an executive session of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee.

Donald W. Nyrop, Civil Aeronautics Board Chairman, said June 27 he favored separation of the subsidies and believed they should be paid out of a special appropriation instead of out of Post Office funds.

Testifying June 28, Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer also favored separation of the subsidies from air mail pay. Robert L. L. McCormick, research director for the Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report, read a letter from former President Hoover saying subsidies "may be most desirable" but that they should not be imposed "in this hidden manner."

Amos Heacock, president of the Air Coach Transport Association, representing non-scheduled air lines also urged ending the present system. Langdon P. Marvin, Jr., endorsed the separation legislation on behalf of the American Veterans Committee and the Citizens Committee for Subsidy Separation.

On June 29 Reps. Carl Hinshaw (R-Calif.) and John Kennedy (D Mass.) testified. Later, in a closed session, the Committee heard Walter A. Raidus, Office of Transport and Communication Policy of the Department of State, and Delos W. Rentzel, then Under Secretary of Commerce for Transportation, explain international aspects of the legislation.

Criticizes CAB

During hearings July 2, Sen. Johnson (D Colo.) blasted at the Civil Aeronautics Board for a "do-it-tomorrow" attitude. CAB had shown "a lack of cooperation" with Congress in working out a new pay schedule for air carriers, he asserted. Johnson said Congress should take from the CAB the power to fix pay rates for air lines hauling mail.

Another witness July 2 was Harold F. Hammond, manager of the Transportation and Communications Department of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce. The Chamber opposed rate fixing by Congress.

L. C. Burwell, Jr., of the Resort Airlines, Inc., Pinehurst, N. C., urged legislation permitting subsidies to air lines which do not carry mail.

CAB Chairman Nyrop wrote Johnson July 9 that "the Board will go forward as rapidly as possible with a separation of the compensatory and subsidy elements of mail pay." The separation for domestic air lines was to be completed by Sept. 1, 1951, and for international air lines by July 1, 1952.

Nyrop also wrote the Committee Chairman that the CAB had made mail rate agreements with the "big four" air carriers; American, Eastern, Trans - World and United. This settlement required the return to the government of about $5 million, as of March 31, 1951, from the four large carriers.

Four witnesses before the Committee July 9-12 urged a separation of the subsidy from the mail rate. They were Robert W. Prescott, president of the Flying Tiger Line, Inc.; Tipton, general counsel of the Air Transport Association, made up most of the nation's scheduled air lines; Charles H. Slayman, Jr., of American Veterans of World War II, and Elliott Bredhoff, assistant general counsel of the CIO.

Speak For Railroads

Gregory S. Prince, assistant general counsel of the Association of American Railroads, urged July 10 that government rate-fixing for air lines be put on the same basis as for railroads. Robert M. Drysdale, Jr., executive vice president of the Federation for Railway Progress, said July 11 that "complete elimination of direct subsidies to the airlines is long past due."

A uniform mail pay schedule for all classes of air carriers was urged

July 17 by Robert J. Smith, president of Pioneer Air Lines, Inc. He said different mail rates for different air carrier classes "might mean the end of the operation of such carriers as Pioneer".

C. R. Smith, president of American Airlines, Inc., said July 13 he favored separation.

Meanwhile, on July 18 Chairman Johnson introduced a new measure (S 1870) authorizing the government to raise rates to air mail carriers and make subsidy payments if they were "essential to national defense."

Several witnesses before the Committee July 19-26 urged continuance of the subsidy if the separation were made. Charles E. Beard, vice president of Braniff Airways, Inc., warned July 24 that some of the smaller air lines would have to discontinue operations or be forced to merge if a subsidy were not paid for the maintenance of air routes in which there was not a primary public interest.

J. H. Carmichael, president of Capital Airlines, tesified July 19; Warren L. Pierson, chairman of the board of Trans World Airlines, July 23; and Juan T. Trippe, president of Pan American World Airways, Inc., July 26. All supported the general policy of separating subsidy from air mail payments. Stanley Gewirtz of Americans for Democratic Action took the same stand in testimony July 20.

The Senate Committee concluded hearings July 30 on the seven bills. T. H. Ready, president of Helicopter Air Service, Chicago, testified he favored the separation, but believed the helicopter service used to carry mail in Chicago and Los Angeles should be excepted.

Two other witnesses supporting the separation were Raymond A. Norden, president of Seaboard and Western Airlines, Inc., and E. R. Jelsma, staff director of the Committee's subcommittee on domestic land and water transportation.

Committee Acts

The Committee settled Aug. 8 on a measure to provide a schedule of air mail payments for hauling both overseas and interstate mail until the CAB could adjust this rate schedule by specified cost standards, and to have the CAB make subsidy payments to any certified air carrier for the purpose of maintaining and continuing the development of air transportation. The Committee reported the measure Aug. 9 as a substitute for one of the bills (S 436).

On Sept. 12 the Committee agreed to propose on the floor an amendment to this bill that would limit subsidies to those air lines already receiving them.

Floor Action

Floor discussion on S 436 started Sept. 17, and continued Sept. 18 and 19, when the bill was passed by voice vote after amendments had been agreed to.

Johnson acted as floor manager for the bill. He told the Senate it would "bring subsidies out in the open and take the air lines off a cost-plus basis." It would not, however, eliminate subsidies where they were necessary to "foster and control the orderly development of the air transportation system," he explained.

Paul H. Douglas, (D Ill.), George D. Aiken (R Vt.) and Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.) objected to Committee provisions requiring that the amount of mail pay to American air lines operating abroad be no less than that paid foreign lines. Their objection was based on the proposition that the rates paid to these air lines were much higher than cost, and therefore included a hidden subsidy. They wanted to put the rates paid to carriers operating abroad on the same cost-plus-fair-return formula worked out for domestic carriers.

Johnson argued that American firms in overseas operation should not receive less than foreign firms, whose rates were worked out by international agreement. If Congress tampered with them he asserted, it might bring on a rate war. If the foreign carriers' rates were too high, he said the Postmaster General had the authority to avoid such rates by using only U.S. lines, which then might be paid what the Postmaster General considered proper.

Brien McMahon (D Conn.) offered an amendment, agreed to on roll call, 53-28 (see page 544), Sept. 19, limiting subsidies for U.S. air lines operating overseas to those holding certificates as mail carriers. Aiken objected that the amendment would encourage monopoly in overseas air transportation, but Owen Brewster (R Maine) pointed out that existing law required air lines to be certified as mail carriers in order to obtain subsidies.

Douglas then offered an amendment to require the Postmaster General to consider actual costs to U.S. air lines operating abroad in fixing their mail pay. This would bring the subsidy for overseas air lines out in the open, he argued. Johnson opposed it on the ground that it would upset international rate agreements, and it was rejected on roll call, 23-58.

Long-Term Contracts

By a vote of 62-14, the Senate agreed to an amendment by Pat McCarran (D Nev.) allowing the CAB to sign long-term subsidy contracts with carriers operating in both foreign and domestic service, with a three-year maximum on the duration of subsidy contracts with domestic carriers.

It also accepted by voice vote an amendment by John J. Williams (R Del.), to fix a five-year limit on subsidy contracts with international air carriers in place of the 10-year limit provided in the bill. Williams' amendment at first provided for a three-year limit, but he changed the limit to five at the request of Johnson.

Williams won approval, by voice vote, of a second amendment eliminating a provision stating that payment of subsidies to carriers operating abroad should be "without reduction" for the life of the contract. The Senate also accepted by voice vote an amendment by Douglas directing the CAB to cancel any subsidy contract for an air line if it found that the line offered gifts, entertainment or other gratuities to government officers and employees.

Just before passage of the bill, Aiken attacked it, declaring that "if any bill ever came before Congress that sets up a monopoly operation for a small segment of an industry, this bill is it." He said the bill would give "tremendous profits" to Pan American Airways and Trans World Air Lines for hauling air mail overseas.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Brien McMahon (D Conn.) — Limit subsidies to U.S. air lines operating overseas to those holding certificates as mail carriers. Roll-call vote, 53-28.

Pat McCarran (D Nev.) — Authorize the Civil Aeronautics Board to sign long-term subsidy contracts with carriers in both foreign and domestic air service, with three years fixed as the maximum duration for domestic carrier contracts. Roll call, 62-14.

John J. Williams (R Del.) — Fix a five-year limit on subsidy contracts for international air carriers. Voice.

Williams — Eliminate a provision in the foreign subsidy section of the bill stating that payments to carriers should be "without reduction" during the period of the contract. Voice.

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) — Direct CAB to cancel any subsidy contract if it found that an air line offered gifts, entertainment or other gratuities to any officer or employee of the government. Voice.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) — Require the Postmaster General to consider actual costs of American air lines operating overseas in fixing their mail pay. Roll-call vote, 23-58.

HOUSE

Nine bills on air line subsidy payments were introduced in the House during 1951, but the House conducted no hearings and took no action on the subject.

Three of the bills were introduced by Rep. John W. Heselton (R Mass.), four by Rep. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.), and one each by Reps. William L. Dawson (D Ill.) and Clare E. Hoffman (R Mich.).

Highway Aid

Summary — After the 1951 midwestern floods, Congress enacted legislation which increased from $5 million to $15 million the amount available for reconstruction of federal highways. Action was completed by Congress on Oct. 8 and the bill was signed Oct. 15.

There was little debate in either chamber but, apparently through a mistake in the House, action on the measure varied somewhat from the usual procedure. The Senate Public Works Committee Sept. 21 recommended a bill (S 2025) increasing federal highway aid and the Senate passed it by voice vote Oct. 1. The House Public Works Committee recommended its own bill (HR 5257) Sept. 25. Provisions in both bills were identical. The House overlooked the Senate - passed measure and passed its own bill by voice vote Oct. 4. The Senate then passed the bill a second time, but under the House number. It did this by voice vote Oct. 8.

Provisions — HR 5257 amended the Federal - Aid Highway Act of 1950 and increased from $5 million to $15 million the amount available as an emergency relief fund for repair of primary and secondary roads. The money would cover the federal government's share of aid which the Act set at 50 per cent. Federal funds are matched by the states.

SENATE

The Senate Public Works Committee, Sept. 21, recommended S 2025, introduced by Sen. Dennis Chavez (D N.M.).

A subcommittee, during hearings on the measure, questioned an assistant to Defense Production Administrator Manly Fleischmann about newspaper reports that Mobilization Director Charles E. Wilson had promised to provide Britain with American steel for its rearmament program.

The assistant, Melvin L. Anshen, quoted Fleischmann, as saying that he believed the government had made "no firm commitment" to furnish Britain between two and three million tons of American steel. Anshen added that the DPA head "was as amazed as I was to see those figures being discussed." A spokesman for Wilson later said the steel had been promised for delivery in 1952 if the over-all economic situation permitted.

The Subcommittee received complaints that highway agencies throughout the U.S. were unable to get enough steel for highway bridge projects they regarded as important to national security.

In its report the Committee said that unless flood-damaged roads were repaired some midwestern rural communities would face a serious interruption in the harvesting and marketing of crops and consequently heavy financial losses.

During the brief Senate debate Oct. 1, Kansas Sens. Frank Carlson (R) and Andrew F. Schoeppel (R), said that while they had hoped the bill would authorize funds for repair of highways which are not federal or state road systems, they were "extremely appreciative" of the assistance granted in the bill. Passage was by voice vote.

HOUSE

The House Public Works Committee recommended a similar bill (HR 5257) Oct. 1. Provisions of the bill, which was introduced by Rep. Charles A. Buckley (D N.Y.), Chairman of the House Public Works Committee, were the same as those of its Senate companion S 2025.

The House passed the bill by voice vote Oct. 4 after a brief explanation by George H. Fallon (D Md.). Fallon told Members that most of the funds authorized would be used in Missouri and Kansas but that a balance of about $6 million would be available in the event of any future emergency.

Since the House passed HR 5257 rather than the Senate - approved measure, it was necessary for the Senate to pass the bill a second time under the House number. It did this by voice vote Oct. 8. "Through the mistake of the House," Sen. Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) told the Senate, the Senate - approved bill (S 2025) was overlooked by the House.

President Truman signed the bill into law Oct. 15. It became Public Law 175.

Access Roads

HR 5504 — P.L. 177

Summary — In line with the expanded national defense program, Congress in 1951 increased the authorization funds for repair and construction of roads essential to national defense. It completed action on the bill Oct. 8 and President Truman signed it Oct. 16.

The Senate Public Works Committee recommended a bill (S 1956) Sept. 21. As reported, it would have increased the $10 million authorized under the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1950 to $45 million, and would have amended the act to permit control of access to defense roads along the rights - of - way. The House Public Works Committee recommended its own bill (HR 5504) the same day, simply making an increase in authorization to $45 million. The House passed its bill by voice vote Oct. 4, and the Senate accepted the House version of the bill Oct. 8.

Provisions — The law amended the Federal - Aid Highway Act of 1950 to increase the authorization for defense highways from $10 million to $45 million. Of the additional amount, $20 million was made available for contract immediately, and up to $5 million was allowed for use in reconstruction, repair, and maintenance of roads in maneuver areas, after certification by the Secretary of Defense.

SENATE

The Senate Public Works Committee Sept. 21 recommended S 1956, to increase by $35 million federal aid for repair of roads essential to national defense. In its report, the Committee said the $10 million originally authorized was exhausted because of the speeding up of defense construction.

Of the amount authorized, $20 million was to be available for contract immediately. Up to $5 million was to be authorized for use by the Secretary of Defense in maneuver areas. The bill also permitted the Commissioner of Public Roads to control rights of access on roads built with the funds.

After a brief explanation of the bill, the Senate passed it by voice vote Oct. 1.

HOUSE

The House Public Works Committee recommended a similar bill, HR 5504, Oct. 1. The House Bill also increased the authorization by $35 million, making a total of $45 million available under the authorization. Of this amount, $20 million was to be available for contract immediately, and up to $5 million was to be allowed for use in maneuver areas.

The House passed HR 5504 by voice vote Oct. 4.

The Senate accepted the House version Oct. 8. Passage was by voice vote. The measure was signed by President Truman Oct. 16 and became Public Law 177.

"Good Faith" Pricing

Summary — The Senate passed a bill (S 719) Aug. 2, 1951, to make a seller's "good faith" a complete defense in price discrimination cases arising under the Robinson-Patman Act unless it was proved he knew his competitor's practices were unlawful.

A House Judiciary Subcommittee conducted hearings on this bill and on a similar House measure, but failed to report either.

Background — The Clayton Act of 1914 provided that it should be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce to discriminate in price between purchasers, when the effect of the discrimination might be substantially to lessen competiton or tend to create a monopoly. The Act further stated "nothing herein contained shall prevent discrimination . . . made in good faith to meet competition."

Enforcement problems developed because absence of "good faith" was difficult to prove, regardless of the effect of the discrimination.

In 1936 Congress passed the Robinson-Patman Act. Under this Act, the determination of the legality of price discrimination turned on whether there was a lessening of competition or tendency to create a monopoly. A seller who engaged in price discrimination could show that (a) his lower price was based on actual savings in costs, and (b) that he acted in good faith to meet competition.

Good faith thus became a "procedural" instead of an "absolute" defense, and legality of discrimination was determined on the basis of the effect of the acts, rather than on the intent.

The Federal Trade Commission issued cease-and-desist orders against a number of firms under this Act. Cases against Morton Salt Company, Corn-Products Company, and Staley Manufacturing Company went to the Supreme Court, and the FTC was upheld. In the last two cases the court held there was evidence of collusion in the use of a basing-point pricing system.

Court Rulings

In April 1948, in the Cement Institute case, the Supreme Court found that the basing - point system as used by the cement industry was a collusive method of price-fixing, and therefore illegal. This was followed by the Rigid Steel Conduit case, in which the court ruled that the basing-point system was an unfair method of competition.

While the Supreme Court decisions did not touch on delivered pricing other than the collusive aspects of the basing - point system, there were widespread claims that it cast doubt on the legality of all delivered pricing.

A bill was introduced in the 81st Congress (S 1008) to place a two-year moratorium on all cases involving delivered pricing while Congress studied the situation. The bill was amended and passed as permanent legislation modifying the Robinson-Patman Act, but was vetoed by President Truman, who stated that "there is no bar to freight absorption or delivered prices as such." (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, 1949, p. 704, and CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, p. 564.)

In the meantime a Supreme Court decision in the Standard Oil case apparently reversed the Morton Salt Company decision. It established that price discriminations made in good faith to meet the equally low price of a competitor were lawful. In effect this set aside the Robinson-Patman Act's emphasis on results rather than intent of price discrimination.

SENATE

Committee

On Jan. 29, 1951, S 719 was introduced in the Senate with the comment of the sponsors that it would "conform statutory law to the interpretation . . . recently enunciated by the Supreme Court." The bill stated as its purpose, "To establish beyond doubt that, under the Robinson-Patman Act, it is a complete defense to a charge of price discrimination for the seller to show that its price differential has been made in good faith to meet the equally low price of a competitor."

Sponsors were Sens. Pat McCarran (D Nev.), Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.), Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md.), the late Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.), Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) and John Bricker (R Ohio).

The Judiciary Committee, of which McCarran was chairman, did not conduct public hearings, but reported the bill favorably on April 23.

Opponents said that instead of clarifying the law, the bill would change it — that price discriminations were proved unfair under the Robinson - Patman Act if they resulted in "substantially" lessened competition, but under this bill the government would have to prove intent to lessen competition.

Proponents argued it was necessary to clarify the right of a seller to meet competition by reducing prices through freight absorption as well as other means.

Opponents declared that the issue of freight absorption was injected into the debate as "propaganda," since the Supreme Court only outlawed freight absorption or delivered prices where these prices were arrived at through collusion.

The bill's sponsors said it would not restore the basing-point system. A footnote to the majority report said, "This controversy has also been referred to as the 'basing-point controversy,' but such a reference is misleading and should be avoided since it is settled law that use of a basing-point pricing system is unlawful."

Opponents of the bill stated in the minority report that "This (good faith) defense would serve to bolster the systematic matching of delivered prices under basing-point systems."

Floor Action

The bill was debated on the Senate floor July 2, when Russell B. Long (D La.) proposed that the bill be sent to a committee for public hearings. McCarran said that huge volumes were available on the subject, and that the sole purpose of the bill was "to legislate what is law by judicial decision."

Long, an opponent of the bill, said it "would injure small business and do a great amount of harm to our competitive economy, and would, in many respects, dash the hopes for industrial expansion in the South, in New England, and in the West."

When the measure was again taken up by the Senate Aug. 1 and 2, Sen. Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) led the battle against passage. He said the bill "is a further effort presented on behalf of certain monopolistic interests to weaken the antitrust laws of the nation, to scuttle completely the Robinson-Patman Act, to make possible the establishment of a multiple basing - point system and to enable large suppliers to discriminate again in favor of large purchasers, to the detriment and destruction of small business."

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) warned that an "open season on small business" would come with passage of the bill, and Long called it "extremely dangerous to small business." Johnson, one of the sponsors, said it would encourage businessmen to "engage in good faith competition."

In debate Aug. 2, McCarran maintained the bill would not injure small business but, on the contrary, would preserve free enterprise. Wherry, also a sponsor, said the legislation would simply confirm a ruling of the Supreme Court.

Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) and William Benton (D Conn.) predicted the bill would be vetoed by the President.

An amendment by Kefauver which he said would bring the bill more nearly into line with the intent of the original Robinson-Patman Act was rejected, 38-39, on roll call. (see page 544.) The Kefauver amendment would have banned good faith as an absolute defense when the effect of the price discrimination "may be substantially to lessen competition" or would tend to create a monopoly. A modification to the Kefauver amendment offered by Francis Case (R S.D.) to apply the ban when it might destroy competition or create monopoly rather than "lessen" competition or "tend to create" a monopoly was rejected by voice vote.

A motion by Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.) to recommit the bill was rejected by a 33-45 roll-call vote, and the bill was then passed by a roll-call vote of 42-34. Supporting the bill were 33 Republicans and nine Democrats; six Republicans and 28 Democrats opposed it.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.)—Amend act to allow the "good faith" defense to be an absolute defense unless the effect would be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. Roll-call vote, 38-39.

Francis Case (R S.D.) — Modify Kefauver amendment by changing "lessen" to "destroy," and phrase "or tend to create" to "and create." Voice.

HOUSE

A House Judiciary Subcommittee began hearings July 11 on a bill (HR 2820) introduced Feb. 22 by Rep. Francis E. Walter (D Pa.) to set forth the right of a seller to engage in competition by reducing prices in good faith, and amend the Clayton Anti-Trust law to provide that good faith shall be a complete defense to a charge of price discrimination. It also would amend the Federal Trade Commission Act to provide that a seller not acting in a conspiracy in restraint of trade might reduce prices in good faith to meet competition, unless he knew or should have known that the lower price was unlawful.

Federal Trade Commissioner Stephen J. Spingarn testified July 11 in opposition to the bill. It "would definitely weaken the Commission's ability to stop price - fixing combinations and other monopolistic and oppressive practices," he said.

Testifying July 12, Rep. Wright Patman (D Tex.), said the bill would "cut the heart out of our system of monopoly control." David T. Searls of Houston said July 12 that the legislation was of "vital necessity to the growth of the southwest."

Hearings on both the House bill (HR 2820) and the Senate - passed bill (S 719) were continued into September.

George J. Burger, speaking for the National Federation of Independent Business, criticized the bills Sept. 13 on grounds they would destroy the "Robinson - Patman protections enjoyed by small, independent businesses against ruinous price discriminations." George H. Frates, National Association of Retail Druggists, opposed the bills for the same reason.

Among other groups represented Sept. 13 were the National Congress of Petroleum Retailers, the U.S. Wholesale Grocers Association and the Motor and Equipment Wholesalers Association.

The Subcommittee concluded its hearings Sept. 14, but did not report either bill before the 1951 session ended.

Import Duty Suspension

Lead — HR 4948

The House by voice vote Aug. 13, 1951, passed a bill (HR 4948) to suspend the import duties on lead until March 31, 1953, or until the end of the national emergency, if that were sooner.

The Senate Finance Committee suggested a minor amendment and reported the bill favorably Oct. 19. It reached the Senate floor on the consent calendar Oct. 20, but Sen. George W. Malone (R Nev.) objected to its consideration on the grounds that taxpayers' money would be "misused for financing business ventures which should be financed with private capital." The Senate therefore did not act on the measure during 1951.

The bill was introduced in the House July 25 by Rep. Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.), a member of the House Ways and Means Committee. Supporters of the bill, including the Departments of State, Commerce, Defense and Treasury, the Office of Defense Mobilization and the Economic Cooperation Administration believed the lead shortages would be greatly alleviated through the suspension of duties.

The House Ways and Means Committee reported the bill favorably without amendment Aug. 7, and passage by the House Aug. 13 was also without amendment.

As passed by the House the bill would require the President to revoke the suspension of import duties when the average market price of lead had been for a month below 16 7/8 cents a pounds, delivered at New York. At that time the ceiling price of lead, as fixed by the Economic Stabilization Agency, was 17 cents per pound.

On Oct. 2 a new ceiling of 19 cents was established, so the Senate committee proposed an amendment to provide for a restoration of the duty if the price of lead fell below 18 cents per pound. Senate floor action was blocked by Malone's objection.

Zinc — HR 5448

Duties on zinc would have been suspended until March 31, 1953, or the termination of the national emergency, whichever were sooner under a bill (HR 5448) passed by voice vote of the House Oct. 19, 1951. The Senate did not act during the first session.

The House Committee on Ways and Means unanimously reported the bill favorably Oct. 18, after recommending an amendment to provide that when the price of zinc for a month at East St. Louis, Ill., was below 18 cents a pound the suspension would be revoked. Committee Chairman Robert L. Doughton (D N.C.) told the House that early enactment of the bill was favored by the Economic Stabilization Agency, the Bureau of the Budget, the Office of Defense Mobilization, the Defense Production Administration, and the Defense Materials Procurement Agency.

On Oct. 20, the day after House passage, the Senate Finance Committee reported the bill and recommended "prompt enactment." The bill was placed on the consent calendar, but Senate action was blocked Oct. 20 when Sen. George W. Malone (R Nev.) objected to its consideration.

Tungsten — HR 5248

A bill (HR 5248) to suspend the $8-a-ton import duty on tungsten for a period of two years or until the end of the national emergency, whichever would come first, was passed by voice vote of the House Oct. 15. The Senate did not act during the 1951 session.

The bill was introduced Aug. 20 by Rep. Robert L. Doughton (D N.C.), Chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee. Before reporting the bill favorably on Oct. 1, the committee added a provision calling for the reimposition of the tariff if the domestic price of tungsten should fall below $63 a ton for any one month. The amendment was accepted by the House, and the bill passed under a rules suspension.

Copper Import Duties

Congress on May 10 approved the bill (HR 3336) suspending the existing 2-cents-a-pound import duty on foreign copper. The suspension would remain in force until Feb. 15, 1953, or the end of the national emergency, whichever occurred first. Mr. Truman signed the measure May 22.

Intended to encourage imports of scarce metal for defense purposes, the legislation nevertheless provided safeguards to protect the domestic mining industry if the price of copper fell below 24 cents a pound. In that event, President Truman, upon notification by the U. S. Tariff Commission, would be directed to reimpose existing copper duties by proclamation.

The version of HR 3336 ultimately enacted was a compromise one worked out by a House - Senate conference group. Originally, the House had provided that the suspension end Feb. 15, 1953, but its conferees agreed to a Senate amendment to terminate the suspension on that date or at the end of the emergency. The Senate conferees agreed to elimination of a second amendment including baling twine among duty - free imports.

The bill was introduced by Rep. Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.). The House Ways and Means Committee unanimously approved it March 21, and reported it April 2. The House passed it by voice vote April 6. The Senate Finance Committee approved it April 17, after making the change in the expiration machinery on the demand of George Malone (R Nev.). The Senate approved the bill by voice vote April 25, after adding the baling twine amendment sponsored by Hugh Butler (R Neb.) and Edward J. Thye (R Minn.).

The conference committee reached its compromise May 8, which the Senate accepted at once. The House followed suit May 10.

Efforts to suspend the copper import duty in 1950 failed. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, page 637.)

Tuna Fish Tariff

HR 5693

The House Oct. 15, 1951, passed by voice vote a bill (HR 5693) imposing a temporary tariff of three cents a pound on imports of fresh and frozen tuna fish. The Senate did not act during the first session.

The tariff would have applied only until April 1, 1953. The bill also directed the Tariff Commission to investigate the competitive position of the domestic tuna industry and to report to Congress on the situation by Jan. 1, 1953.

Several bills were considered by the House Ways and Means Committee to provide an ad valorem duty of 15 per cent of the average apparent annual consumption of fresh or frozen tuna fish during the preceding three years, and a duty of 30 per cent ad valorem for imports in excess of this amount. The Committee felt a more extensive study was desirable, and the Subcommittee chairman, Rep. A. Sidney Camp (D Ga.), therefore introduced the temporary protective measure (HR 5693). The Committee recommended this bill favorably, with a few minor amendments, on Oct. 12.

The amendments were accepted by the House and the bill was passed under a rules suspension Oct. 15.

Federal Reserve Dispute

The convening of the first session of the 82nd Congress in January, 1951, coincided with the flareup of an old dispute between the Treasury Department and the Federal Reserve Board, which administers the Federal Reserve Banking System, over federal fiscal policies, credit control and debt management. No permanent settlement was achieved during the first session.

Members of Congress quickly made clear which of the disputants they favored, and a subcommittee of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report began an investigation of the controversy.

President Truman took the side of the Treasury in the dispute.

Background — While the differences between the Treasury and the FRB over federal fiscal policies existed long before 1951, the new flareup was precipitated by the sharp inflationary pressures brought on in 1950 by the Korean war.

The economics of the fight were roughly this: Commercial banks, insurance companies and other lending institutions own many billions of dollars worth of long - term government securities. The FRB must buy back these bonds at fixed prices when any bank wishes to sell them. Cashing bonds would enable a bank to make more loans.

The Treasury, having the duty of fixing interest rates on government bonds, argued that in the interest of financing national rearmament, the government's credit should remain stable. This, it said, was possible only if the price of government bonds remained at the existing level and interest remained at 2.5 per cent.

But the FRB, whose statutory duty was to regulate the volume, cost and availability of the nation's money supply, held that fixed prices on government securities and low interest rates meant that all interest rates would remain low, thus encouraging lending and expanding credit in a period of inflation. The FRB wanted to lower the cash-in value of government securities and increase interest rates so banks wouldn't be so anxious to cash their bonds.

However, the Treasury said bond holders would anticipate the decline in securities' value and panic might ensue. Besides, the Treasury held, increased interest rates would boost the carrying charge of the federal debt.

The FRB argued that as long as it bought the bonds, the ultimate effect would be that the government financed its rearmament operations by printing more and more money.

Hearings Held

After a White House conference Jan. 31 failed to settle the dispute, the controversy was carried to Congress.

Appearing Feb. 5 before the House Ways and Means Committee to testify on the then pending Revenue Act of 1951, (See page 416), Treasury Secretary John W. Snyder said he was far from convinced that the Reserve Board's proposal would be anti-inflationary. On the House floor later the same day, Reps. John W. McCormack (D Mass.) and Wright Patman (D Tex.), defended Snyder's and the Treasury's position, while Rep. Fred Crawford (R Mich.) attacked it.

Across the Capitol, meanwhile, the Senate Banking and Currency Committee named Sen. A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) to look into the row. On Feb. 7, Robertson announced that the two agencies had agreed to thrash their differences out in private.

By the end of the month, with agreement still lacking, President Truman, in a lengthy memorandum, ordered the disputants to come to some accord at once. He said it was essential that the government develop immediate ways and means of curbing excessive bank lending.

But Mr. Truman simultaneously restated his support of the basic Treasury position. Pending development of a program to curb lending, the President said he hoped "no attempt will be made to change the interest rate pattern."

Within a week after this memorandum was placed in their hands, Treasury and FRB announced they had reached what was described as a "new accord." The compromise called for issuance by the Treasury of a new investment series of long-term, non-marketable bonds, bearing an increased interest rate of 2.75 per cent, in exchange for outstanding long-term, marketable bonds bearing 2.5 per cent interest and maturing June 15 and Dec. 15, 1967 through 1972. About $19 billion worth of these bonds were outstanding, Treasury estimated.

In Congress, this "accord" was greeted with skepticism by Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), a vigorous supporter of the FRB, but some members — including Sens. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.), A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) and Burnet R. Maybank (D S.C.) and Rep. Brent Spence (D Ky.) — hailed it with enthusiasm.

On March 6, Douglas and other Senators introduced a resolution (S J Res 45) to force the Treasury to manage the public debt in line with the monetary and credit policy of the Federal Reserve Board, and, in effect, to give way to the Board on the matter of maintaining the government bond market at a fixed level. The resolution was supported by Sens. J. William Fulbright (D Ark.), Guy M. Gillette (D Iowa), Charles W. Tobey (R N.H.), Ralph E. Flanders (R Vt.) and Edward J. Thye (R Minn.). But at the end of the session no action had been taken on it and none was contemplated.

Probe Started

On April 8, Sen. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.), chairman of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report, announced the creation of a subcommittee to make elaborate studies of "credit control and debt management." He named Rep. Wright Patman (D Tex.) as chairman. O'Mahoney said the subcommittee was assigned to appraise the government's money and credit policy and to look toward a redefinition of the roles of the Treasury Department and the Federal Reserve Board.

The subcommittee planned hearings for 1952, and in preparation for them, sent questionnaires to seven federal agencies and to bank supervisors in all states, as well as to 300 economists, 700 bankers, 40 life insurance company executives and 20 dealers in government bonds.

Small Business Program

Summary — Small business played an important role in Congressional investigations during 1951.

The Senate and House Small Business Committees sought to determine if the smaller operators were getting an even break in the mobilization setup. They studied the little businessman's relationship to the production of key materials, weighed the effect of the draft on his available manpower, and probed complaints that big business was getting a lion's share of defense contracts.

The committees held extensive hearings on the steel supply situation. The Senate group Committee reported that "thousands of small manufacturing establishments are today facing extinction," and placed the blame on government agencies for failing to provide sufficient stockpiles of essential raw materials.

Studying the plastics, aluminum, rubber and nickel industries, lawmakers found evidence that little business was being squeezed out by big business and that black or gray markets in these key materials were being fostered by inequitable distribution.

The Senate Committee also found that small business was hardest hit by lack of manpower since the outbreak of the Korean war and by the transition from a peacetime to a mobilization economy.

As champions of smaller enterprises, the two committees were leading advocates of a small defense plants agency. They thus responded to thousands of complaints from small-business constituents that they were not getting "a fair share" in the defense program.

On the House side, 261 Congressmen sponsored their Small Business Committee's proposal to establish the small-business agency as an amendment to the Defense Production Act. Forty-nine Senators backed a similar amendment in the Senate. A provision along the line of the House and Senate amendments was approved in conference and became a part of the 1951 Defense Production Act. (See page 439.)

SENATE

Controls Hearings

As word came from Director of Defense Mobilization Charles E. Wilson at the beginning of 1951 that across-the-board controls must be imposed with "speed and forthrightness" Congressional champions of small business took steps to see that small plants are not deprived of supplies during a materials shortage.

Sen. John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) and Rep. Wright Patman (D Tex.), chairmen of the Senate and House Small Business Committees, introduced bills on Jan. 17 to provide a program to help small business during the mobilization period.

On the same day, Sparkman announced his committee would begin a series of public hearings on material shortages.

First to testify at the opening session of the Senate Small Business Committee Jan. 18 was Wilson, who said: "We've got to have" inflation controls but that he hoped rationing could be avoided.

Asked by Senators when "effective wage-price controls" and other inflation curbs would be coming, Wilson said he didn't want to give a timetable then.

In response to other questions Wilson said that in the following two years, before new steel plants were completed, there would be a steel shortage requiring "a great deal of juggling" to stretch the supply. The outlook for aluminum and copper was "a little better," Wilson thought.

The impact on the nation's economy of war production would be "much greater" than indicated by prevailing production goals and preparations would have to be made so the goals could be greatly increased if necessary, Wilson said.

Although Wilson pledged that his organization would help all it could, he said small businessmen would have to "push their own business - getting to the Nth degree". Wilson said he saw no particular pitfalls for small business in the mobilization program "that cannot be substantially avoided."

William Henry Harrison, chief of the Defense Production Administration, followed Wilson on the witness stand and told the Committee his agency and the National Production Authority were making every effort to see that small companies got as much defense business as possible.

A "method of appeal" for firms suffering hardship had been provided, Harrison assured the Senators.

However, it was inevitable that a number of firms would have to curtail operation due to temporary shortage of materials, Harrison pointed out. "Such firms surely will be needed in the defense effort" and it would be necessary that defense contract schedules give full consideration to available capacity, he said.

The Senate Committee recessed until later Jan. 18 when it met in executive session to hear John Small, Munitions Board Chairman, and Jess Larson, General Services Administrator, on stockpiling of critical materials.

Appraise Steel Supply

The committee Jan. 19 took up the steel supply situation.

David Carson, chief of NPA's steel division, told the Committee that expansion planned by the industry over the next two years would hike productive capacity to about 115 million tons a year, compared with the 104 million tons then produced annually. In the meantime, said Carson, NPA issued an order requiring producers to maintain a regular flow of steel to warehouses and steel distributors for small business, but the benefits of the order would not be felt before February of 1952.

Questioning Carson, Sparkman said his group had received many complaints about "disgraceful black market prices" for steel and other essential materials.

The Senator called for a drastic crackdown by the government to prevent a black market "stranglehold" on the economy. Carson replied that his agency was aware of the problem and that in the case of steel, the industry itself had been "trying very hard to cope with it." Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) also cited complaints of gray or black markets, and said that steel was not being equitably distributed.

Another witness, Highland Batcheller, chairman of the board of the Allegheny-Ludlum Steel Co. of Pittsburgh, made plain he thought the black market reports were being exaggerated. He said he had not seen a "shred of evidence" that steel producers were condoning or cooperating with black market operations.

Ralph R. West of Cleveland told the Committee Jan. 20. "The manufacturers of northern Ohio are desperate. There just is not enough steel." Russell E. Maintain, operator of a store engineering business in Boston and Woburn, Mass., said his staff had dropped from 110 to 85 persons because of the steel shortage. Mrs. Ethel B. Purdy, of Lyndhurst, N. J., told the Committee that "many large steel consumers are unduly benefiting" from the steel situation and that many small companies "keep operating only by the purchase of overpriced material with resultant harm to their economic position."

Plastics, Aluminum Production

Continuing its series of hearings on materials shortages, the Committee turned to the plastics field Jan. 23.

George S. Nalle, Jr., Texas plastics manufacturer, told the group that "big business" was prospering in the defense emergency at the expense of weaker competitors. Nalle said he and other plastics makers were threatened with "absolute annihilation" by the diversion of essential raw materials to big rubber manufacturing plants.

Dr. Lowell Kilgore, representing the Chemical Division of the National Production Authority, testified, however, that the supply of materials should be adequate "by the end of the year" to get the plastics industry "in fairly good position." Nalle had contended the industry might not survive that long.

The Committee Jan. 26 began a study of aluminum production and heard that the government might restrict the use of that material for consumer goods. Witnesses representing small companies protested that such a move would bankrupt them and eventually hurt the defense program.

Nigel H. Bell, chief of the National Production Authority's light metals division, told the Committee that his agency was considering a ban on nonessentail use of aluminum, as a means of assuring an adequate supply of the metal for military needs. Government allocation of aluminum already was in effect.

Charles E. Hunter of Bristol, Pa., an official of the Storm Sash Institute, called for reappraisal of military requirements and something less than an outright ban on so - called nonessential uses. Elton Darby, on behalf of the Union Aluminum Company, of Sheffield, Ala., said the prospective federal order would work a great hardship until defense orders could be made available to small concerns.

George Mitchell of Metal Trim, Inc., Youngstown, Ohio, appealed to the Committee to "see to it that we don't die" before defense orders are available. O. G. Norton, owner of a sash concern in St. Albans, N.Y., asked the Committee "at least to see that we get a trickle of aluminum."

Report Issued

In a report filed Feb. 5 the Senate Small Business Committee charged that because of the lack of essential raw materials, "thousands of small manufacturing establishments are today facing extinction."

The Committee placed the blame on the "lack of energy and imagination" of the National Production Authority and on "a slumbering" Munitions Board which had failed to stockpile sufficient raw materials.

The group's recommendations included one that NPA immediately discard the voluntary allocation system for raw materials in favor of a controlled program to insure that materials not required for defense "will be reserved for the most essential civilian purposes."

Rubber Study

Next a Small Business Subcommittee headed by Guy M. Gillette (D Iowa) began consideration of a proposal to reactivate a stand-by synthetic rubber plant under RFC jurisdiction at Torrance, Calif., with a capacity of 30,000 tons annually. Gerald B. Hadlock, chief of the rubber division of the RFC testified Feb. 7 that the nation had a large enough supply of natural and synthetic rubber to meet both civilian and military needs.

Hadlock said the agency opposed putting it into operation because it produced "hot" synthetic. The need was for "cold" synthetic rubber, which blends more satisfactorily with natural rubber, he told the Subcommittee. He favored dismantling the plant and using the equipment to augment the facilities of other RFC synthetic plants producing "cold" synthetic.

Meanwhile the Committee opened hearings March 6 on the effect of the draft on civilian manpower.

Brig. Gen. Louis H. Renfrow, deputy director of Selective Service, told the group he had heard no complaints about the draft deferment policies. He said deferments sometimes did not get proper action because the applicants did not state properly the basis for deferment claims. He suggested small business set up local committees to help firms with manpower problems.

Mrs. Anna Rosenberg, Defense Department manpower chief, told the group March 2 that the Pentagon hoped to announce a new Reserve policy soon which would insure deferment of almost all inactive reservists unless the world situation changed.

Fleischmann Testifies

The Gillette Subcommittee opened hearings March 26 on the national rubber program under the Defense Production Act of 1950 and the effect of rubber allocations on small business.

Manly Fleischmann, chief of the National Production Authority, testified it "is not possible to set up a completely fair system" of rubber allocation but he said his agency was doing the best job it could to interpret Congressional intent laws.

George J. Burger, vice president of the National Federation of Independent Business, charged the "big four" rubber companies—Goodyear, United States, Goodrich and Firestone—were following a program of "rule or ruin" in the industry "and it is too bad if anyone stands in their way." Burger charged that the former rubber director of NPA was forced out and replaced by another "in a move to help the big rubber companies. . .feather their own nests."

Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer insisted NPA policies had been drawn with the aim of filling essential needs with a minimum of strains and dislocations to the economy but he emphasized: "Orders of this kind cannot be issued without causing hardships to many concerns, particularly those engaged solely in the production or sale of articles now prohibited." He said it was his aim to provide the assistance necessary for survival of small businesses that met trouble.

On March 27, William O'Neil, president of the General Tire and Rubber Company, called government stockpiling of natural rubber an "absurd damn thing." Congress, he said, should tell military planners that their job was to fight, and that it's the rubber industry's job to produce rubber. O'Neil told the Subcommittee his company had a low-cost process that would solve the synthetic rubber shortage but "fuddy duddy lawyers" in the RFC (which administered the govermment synthetic rubber program) refused to come to terms on the process.

Flay NPA Program

Harry C. McCreary, president of the McCreary Tire and Rubber Company, said March 28 his firm would be destroyed if its allocations were not increased. Vincent Catozella, president of the O'Sullivan Rubber Corporation, testified that his company has been thrown into the red by reduced allocations and had lost many old-time customers.

Both witnesses said the base period adopted by the NPA for computing allocations favored the "big four" tire manufacturers. Another witness, H. P. Schrank, vice president of the Seiberling Rubber Company, urged that the government release 90,000 tons of rubber per month from its stockpile to essential users beginning in April.

As hearings continued March 29,

Edward T. Skinner, manager of the Skinner Brothers Rubber Company, said the program was beginning to look like "a stupid socialistic scheme." Thomas Robins, Jr., president of Hewitt - Robins, Inc., pressed for an efficient coordinator for the program, to be drawn preferably from the "Big Four"

Donald Pratt, of the Durkee-Atwood Company, said the program should be revised to protect smaller companies. J. F. McCann of the Dunlop Tire and Rubber Company blamed administrative features of the program for some difficulties.

W. O. Dismuke of the Dismuke Tire and Rubber Company, Clarksdale, Miss., and other witnesses argued that the base period used in the allocations — the 12 months ending June 30, 1950—was one of high production for big companies and low production for small ones.

On March 30 Gillette asked that the NPA delay issuing its rubber curtailment order on the grounds it would bear too heavily on small rubber companies, but on April 2 the NPA came out with the order eliminating spare tires from new cars to save rubber for trucks, tractor and farm equipment tires.

Tire Shortage Described

John B. Hulse, managing director of the Truck-Trailer Manufacturers' Association, Inc., testified April 2 that more than 2,500 new truck trailers could not be delivered because they lacked tires.

Next day John L. Collyer, president of the B. F. Goodrich Co., said "a civilian crisis in rubber" might be imminent if stockpiling and allocation policies were not changed. Rubber for production of essential civilian products should be substantially increased, Collyer stated. He called NPA's spare tire order "unrealistic and unwise"

Robert S. Wilson, vice-president of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co., testified April 4 that his firm had not received a fair share of rubber for the previous six months.

On April 9 Frank Tobin, speaking for the trucking industry national defense committee, said his industry faces a tire shortage. He blamed "government officials and tire companies."

Leland Spencer, director of the rubber division, of the National Production Authority, said the order banning spare tires from new cars partially "defeats its own purpose" but nevertheless was worthwhile.

Urges Decontrol

Harry E. Humphreys, Jr., president of U.S. Rubber Co., April 10 told the Committee the government should remove controls on the production of essential civilian goods.

"There is no rubber shortage today," he told the Senators. The present stockpile would last through a five - year war without imports, he contended. Humphreys outlined a four-point decontrol plan.

Earl W. Glen, former director of the NPA rubber division, told the Committee he had urged a stockpiling speedup in 1947 which might have headed off the current rubber shortage and saved millions of dollars. He declined to name any individual or agency responsible for delays. He added that the stockpile was big enough so industry should be allowed to find its own supplies without federal restrictions.

Sen. Edward J. Thye (R Minn.), a member of the Committee, said "plain short sightedness" led to many of the supply problems.

Jess Larson, General Services Administrator said April 12 that his agency was nearing its stockpile goal of enough rubber to sustain a five-year war. But he assailed testimony of rubber industry spokesmen who said the government should drop most of its curbs on the rubber industry.

A representative of the RFC told the group April 16 that the rubber shortage was caused by collapse of the synthetic rubber market after World War II. W. Elmer Harber, then RFC chairman, said synthetic production slumped to 215,000 long tons a year in January 1950 compared with 600,000 tons needed to keep the nation well supplied in time of emergency

Air Line Testimony

A subcommittee on aeronautics heard H. B. Robinson of Peninsular Air Transport Inc. Miami, Fla., testify April 23 that the Civil Aeronautics Board was attempting to stifle small, unscheduled airlines. Similar testimony came from Irving E. Herman, of Great Lakes Air Line, Rochester, N.Y. Amos E. Heacock of the Aircoach Transport Association April 24 blamed the big scheduled airlines for the difficulties small ones face.

Chairman Delos Rentzel of the CAB defended his agency April 25, flatly denying that it attempted to discriminate against small airlines. "We don't want to drive them out of business," he said, "but we want them to operate in a legal way."

Joint Hearings

During May the Small Business Committees of both Senate and House held joint hearings on small business participation in the military procurement program. As they opened May 7 Chairman Sparkman of the Senate group declared that the armed services still were procuring most of their materiel from the highly industrialized areas, instead of using facilities "wherever they are."

John D. Small, Munitions Board Chairman, said that percentages of awards to small business had risen steadily during the first quarter of the year, increasing from 16.6 per cent to 25.9 per cent. Other Munitions Board officials also testified.

Defense Production Administration officials said May 8 that they expected small business to benefit under a pending plan to control steel, aluminum and copper.

Witnesses included Edwin T. Gibson, acting DPA administrator, and John Pritchard, deputy DPA administrator for small business.

More than two-thirds of all Navy prime contracts were going to small business concerns, Vice Admiral A. G. Noble, Chief of Navy Materiel, told the joint hearing May 15.

"These contracts represent 69.5 per cent of all Navy prime contracts, and 18.1 per cent of all dollars expended by the Navy for procurement" during the period from July 1, 1950, through March 31, 1951, Noble stated.

The smaller dollar cut for small business was due to the fact that many of the Navy's largest items—ships and weapons—must be built by large concerns, he said.

John A. McCone, Undersecretary of the Air Force, said the Air Force was following "an active small business program," chiefly because it favored "wide dispersal of production facilities." The Air Force also wants to keep small firms in business under the semi - mobilization program so they will be available if the nation goes into total mobilization, McCone added.

Bids On U. S. Contracts

With the joint phase concluded, the hearings continued before the Senate group, while the House Committee went on to other small business studies.

Emerson C. Whitney, president of the William F. Klemp Co. of Chicago, told the Senate Committee May 21 that the government paid three times what it should have for tank grills. His concern sold them to two Detroit companies, which in turn sold them to the government, he said.

If the government had made the contract directly with his firm, Whitney contended, it would not have paid the extra cost charged by the prime contractors.

On May 22 J. P. Lawlor, president of General Filter Co. of Ames, Iowa, complained to the Committee that his firm bid $61,251 under the Refinite Corporation's bid for 105 mobile demineralizers. Nevertheless, he lost the bid, he said, because his bid was determined to be "excessively low," and his plant's capacity not considered large enough to handle the contract.

Brig. Gen. H. A. Shephard explained May 24 that the Air Force made an "error in judgment" in rejecting the low competitive bid from General Filter and negotiating a contract at a higher figure with Refinite of Ralston, Neb.

Also May 24 Chairman James E. Murray (D Mont.) of the Senate Labor Committee introduced three bills (S 1542, S 1543 and S 1544) to aid small businesses in obtaining their share of defense contracts, and to strengthen anti-monopoly laws. None were acted on during the 1951 session.

The Committee heard more testimony May 28 and 29 from representatives of small businesses interested in defense contracts.

S. Abbott Smith, Smaller Business Association of New England, recommended that an independent small-business agency be set up to safeguard the interest of small enterprise. He also endorsed "legitimate five percenters," and said the average small businessman needed their help in running down elusive contracts.

George R. Frankovich, New England Manufacturing Jewelers' and Silversmiths' Association; H. Leon Laycock, Fulford Manufacturing Co., Providence, R.I.; and Henry P. Husserl, Rhode Island Stamping Co., Providence, R.I., all appeared to protest their inability to get critical materials essential for their businesses.

N. T. Rockel, General Armature and Manufacturing Co., Lock Haven, Pa., said he had unreasonable difficulties in obtaining information on military contract requirements. He suggested an advisory group to work out defense production problems of small businesses.

John E. Orchard, Orchard Brothers, Inc., Rutherford, N.J., and E. C. Hyde, Maine Industrial Mobilization Division, both said small businessmen were being stymied in their attempts to land contracts.

Push War Plants Unit

Sparkman announced June 4 that he and 49 other Senators would try to establish an independent government agency similar to the Smaller War Plants Corporation set up in 1942 to help small business. Later offered as an amendment to the Defense Production Act, the proposal was incorporated in the 1951 revisions to that controls statute (see page 439).

The agency, called the Small Defense Plants Administration, was empowered to recommend loans and advances to help small defense manufacturers. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation was authorized to put up the money.

Sparkman, acting as spokesman for the program's sponsors, said the existing Defense Production Act contained "no concrete proposals for assisting small business through this defense effort."

As a consequence, he added, the nation's small enterprises got little or no help from executive agencies in obtaining war contracts or an even break in the mobilization program and were up against a crisis that required immediate government action. Sparkman pointed out that under similar circumstances in June, 1942, legislation creating the Smaller War Plants Corporation passed both the Senate and House without a single dissenting vote.

Manpower Report

The Manpower Subcommittee of the Senate Small Business Committee, in a report filed June 18, said that the sudden call on manpower resources after the outbreak of the Korean war hit small business concerns hardest. Part of the difficulty arose from failure of the government to implement a clear manpower policy, it asserted.

In addition to losing manpower, many small plants had to curtail production because of materials scarcity and inability to obtain defense contracts.

The Subcommittee, headed by Sen. William Benton (D Conn.) said that it did not believe government agencies fully appreciated the gread productivity of small business. It recommended that the federal departments outline their manpower proposals and plans relative to small business, and report semiannually to cabinet officials.

Reports on Contracts

In a report to the Senate issued June 20 the Senate Small Business Committee accused the armed services of an attitude of "royalism" which gave favored bidders, usually large concerns, the lion's share of defense contracts. It called for a "spread the contract" policy on the part of military procurement officers so that small business might get more defense contract awards.

A subsequent report released July 19 said ten large manufacturing companies had received 40 per cent of the total dollar volume of defense contracts since Korea.

Fifty large companies received almost two-thirds of the dollar volume of such contracts during the same period, the report stated.

"Watchdog" Hearings

A new phase of the Senate group's study of small business began when Committee Chairman Sparkman announced July 2 the establishement of a "watchdog" subcommittee to check on the role of small business in the defense program. He said the group would investigate misuse of critical supplies and unemployment resulting from the transition from civilian to military production.

Sen. Blair Moody (D Mich.) was named chairman of the new subcommittee, which included Guy M. Gillette (D Iowa), Russell B. Long (D La.), Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.), and James H. Duff (R Pa.).

As the study got under way Marshall C. Thomas, president of the Thomas Industrial Supply Company of Norwalk, Conn., testified July 16 at hearings in Detroit, that racketeers were selling nickel at high prices. Testifying under subpena, Thomas admitted that he sold nickel anodes for up to $5.50 a pound, although previous witnesses before the group said the normal market price was 67 cents. He denied that he knew any racketeers, but said "word has got back to me" that racketeers were selling the scarce metal.

At the hearings, Walter Reuther, president of the CIO United Automobile Workers, proposed a big expansion of steel production to speed the defense effort. I. T. O'Brien, official of the Chrysler Corporation, said Chrysler might have to shut down by September unless it was allocated more steel. Two Ford Motor Company officials told about materials shortages plaguing their organization.

The "watchdog" Subcommittee held hearings Aug. 21 and 22 in an effort to trace the alleged black market in nickel.

High Price of Scrap

Chairman Moody charged that larger industries were making "a practice" of paying more than small businessmen could afford after hearing testimony that Westinghouse and General Electric had paid from $3 to $4.50 a pound for nickel.

Sidney S. Gould of Combined Industries, Inc., a Brooklyn nickel-plating firm, testified that he had to pay $3 a pound for "the rankest grade of scrap." He added that when he refused to pay cash, his supplier, Flurey Products Corp., Brooklyn, instructed him to make out his check to Adrian Roman. In subsequent testimony Adrian B. Roman of the Burgan Supply Company, Brooklyn, declined to answer questions about commissions or "kick-backs" to Flurey.

Officials of Seymour Manufacturing Company, Seymour, Conn., testified their company had sold the nickel to Flurey on repeated assurances that it was for legitimate use, at 76 1/2 cents to 79 1/2 cents a pound. They stated that Flurey would be cut off from further supply.

The operators of the Flurey Company, Robert Corey and Benjamin S. Flug, appeared Aug. 28 before the Subcommittee. Senators were dissatisfied with their testimony, however, and Moody and Duff warned them and another witness, Henry Eisenstadt, a New York trader in non-ferrous metals and chemicals, that they could be cited for contempt for reluctance to answer questions.

Metals Profiteering

Rounding up the findings of the Moody Subcommittee, the full Committee reported to the Senate Sept. 17 that a growing army of gray marketeers, thriving under "official apathy," virtually cornered a sizeable part of the free market in nickel and a dozen other critical defense materials.

Demanding "vigorous action" by the Department of Justice, Internal Revenue Bureau and the Office of Price Stabilization against any persons or companies engaged in the "vicious and amoral system of profiteering," the report cited nickel as a "case history" of the gray market in key materials.

The Committee said the nickel gray market was made possible by "large companies" able to pay exorbitant prices and by the "fuzziness" of Office of Price Stabilization regulations.

Both Senate and House Small Business Committees joined with the Senate and House Banking and Currency Committees Oct. 12 to hear progress reports from Charles E. Wilson, director of the Office of Defense Mobilization, and Manly Fleischmann, head of both the Defense Production Administration and the National Production Authority.

Both men discussed the controls program as it affected the allocation of scarce materials. Both predicted the tightest pinch on civilian production was yet to come and would be felt after the first of 1952. But they insisted that some civilian production would be continued "unless the military program is increased suddenly and drastically."

Steel Gray Market

Critical materials came under further study when the Moody group held hearings on the snowballing prices of steel as it moved through the "gray market."

At a Chicago session, a young steel broker Nov. 20 told the group he started with $1,300 of his own in 1946 and expected to gross $7 million this year after grossing $5-$6 million last year. He was Seymour Waldman, head of Emergency Steel Service Company, Skokie, Ill.

Sen. Moody said he believed scarce steel could be blamed on the large number of middlemen in the field, each taking his cut. He declared that government regulations should be changed to make this illegal.

In evidence, the group outlined an example of a "typical gray market daisy chain" showing that one steel shipment changed hands more than half a dozen times and swelled in price from $5.20 to $15.74 a hundred pounds.

In Detroit on Nov. 29 the subcommittee heard of other profitable deals. According to testimony of officials of the Oakman Manufacturing Company, two dummy companies were set up so old-line steel mills and warehouses would not discover they were reselling all the excess steel they could buy.

Officials of suppliers of the Oakman Company said they did not know their steel was being resold and would have cut off Oakman as a customer if they had known.

200 Per Cent Profit

On Nov. 30, Sen. Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) asked one witness whether it "doesn't actually verge on treason" for middlemen to profit on shortages. The witness, Charles B. Soloman, secretary of the Barry Steel Company of Detroit, simply replied, "No."

Eugene Zack, vice president of the M. W. Zack Company, told the Senators how the Palmer Bolt Company, owned by his father, bought 100,000 tons of war surplus scrap — some of it wagon bolts from Civil War days—and made a 200 per cent profit on it by reselling it to steel middlemen. Zack said he would not be surprised if the records showed a $3 million profit on the deal.

At hearings in Washington Dec. 3 the Senators heard conflicting testimony as to whether a steel shortage actually existed. J. V. Honeycutt, assistant vice president in charge of sales for the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, said there was no over-all steel shortage, that steel mills would be looking for customers next year and there was no need to cut production of automobiles.

He said the gray market in steel increased in scope and tonnage after the Controlled Materials Plan was imposed by the DPA last July 1.

This was to be expected, he explained, since according to the CMP, allocations were based on consumers' estimates of needs. "Naturally," Honeycut stated, "everyone exaggerated requirements."

Manly Fleischmann, Defense Production Administration chief, maintained, however, that a steel shortage did exist and that controls for steel distribution were necessary. He added that allotments made under CMP were carefully screened and denied that exaggerated claims were granted.

A third witness, David F. Austin, vice president in charge of sales for the United States Steel Corporation, said other methods "less restrictive than CMP would have accomplished the same purpose."

HOUSE

The House Small Business Committee covered the nation in its studies on how small enterprises fared under defense mobilization. The Committee was headed by Rep. Wright Patman (D Tex.).

Hearings

A Subcommittee headed by Rep. Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) conducted field hearings during March and April in 30 cities in 23 states. It heard 700 witnesses testify on emergency problems of small business.

Cities at which the group checked first hand on shortages and procurement problems included Lynchburg, Va., Nashville, Tenn., Atlanta, Ga. Raleigh N. C., Charleston W. Va. Covington Ky., Cincinnati, Ohio. Indianapolis, Ind. Lafayette Ind., Toledo Ohio, Rock Island, Ill., Davenport Iowa St. Louis, Mo., Louisville Ky. Harrisburg, Pa., Syracuse, N.Y., Brooklyn, N.Y., Paterson N.J. Hartford, Conn., Providence R.I., Worcester, Mass., Manchester, N.H.

Also Little Rock, Ark., Dallas, Tex., Houston, Tex. and San Francisco and Los Angeles, Calif.

Although the Committee made no report as a result of these hearings, Chairman Patman said April 17 the investigation had turned up "widespread evidence of gray or black markets in basic materials." He said the group would look for a method to stop such black market activities.

However, Rep. William S. Hill (R Colo.), a member of the House Small Business Committee, gave his version of one phase of the joint hearings in a statement May 6.

Asserting that the small businessman was at a disadvantage in military procurement, he said, "Negotiation of contracts cuts the throat of the small manufacturer because it places the large corporations in an advantageous position. The large companies are financially able to maintain men at key points to obtain information on products to be purchased. It also opens the field to the well-known 'five percenters'. . . at the expense of the small-businessman and the taxpayer."

While the military services steadily increased the number of negotiated contracts, small-businessmen complained to the Committee that they received no notice of many contracts let by direct negotiation. Subsequently, in June, the Munitions Board agreed to announce 18 days in advance when military purchasers planned to award a contract by direct negotiation rather than by invitations to bid.

The third House Small Business Subcommittee, headed by Clarence G. Burton (D Va.), studied special problems of small business groups. At Chicago hearings May 11 and 12, the Congressmen received first hand information on the difficulties of independent manufacturers of farm equipment, tools and supplies in obtaining enough material to make essential farm equipment.

In addition to closed-session hearings on the aluminum supply, the Burton group conducted hearings in Washington on the problems of small business under the Controlled Materials Plan. Under CMP, the total production of the critical materials, steel, copper and aluminum, is allotted by the Defense Production Administration among defense, defense - supporting, civilian production and construction programs.

Thirty government officials testified at the hearings which revealed that some businessmen had been unable to place orders for steel allocated under the plan.

Report

This study produced the only report released by the Committee during the year. It concluded that "in the scramble for materials that accompanies severe shortages the small producer is usually the one that gets hurt the most."

The report warned that operation of the CMP was threatened by "confusion and uncertainties," "indiscriminate use of directives," "complexity" of the administrative setup, and "lack of coordination between policy and operations."

While it said controls such as CMP were "necessary to our survival during a period of war or emergency," it cautioned that controls must not become permanent and said "CMP must be abandoned at the earliest possible moment."

The Committee planned a second report, covering progress of small business during the year, to be made to Congress in 1952.

Seek New Defense Unit

In pressing for the establishment of a Small Defense Plants Administration the Patman Committee obtained the backing of 261 Congressmen to an amendment offered to the Defense Production Act. (See page 448.) The amendment was proposed by the Banking and Currency Committee in collaboration with the Small Business group.

Arguing for the new agency, Patman said it would provide a place in Washington and in all of the principal cities throughout the country where a small - businessman interested in getting defense orders could get information. All of his problems could be handled under "one roof," according to Patman. "And if there will be a lot of running around to do, this agency will do it for him."

Tax Write-Offs, Defense Loans

A House Executive Expenditures Subcommittee March 19 opened a two-fold investigation of government defense loans under the 1950 Defense Production Act, and the program of accelerated tax amortization of defense construction costs provided in the 1950 Revenue Act.

After lengthy hearings the Subcommittee, headed by Porter Hardy, Jr., (D Va.), issued a report sharply criticizing administration of both programs. The report called handling of the programs "unsound and detrimental to the public interest in many respects." It also cited favoritism to federal employees by defense contract seekers.

Hearings

As it opened hearings March 19, the Subcommittee focused its attention on an alleged "can't lose" venture in which three men put up $600 of their own and got a $7.8 million government loan on a defense plant.

Chairman Hardy censured the National Production Authority (an agency of the Commerce Department) for its approval of the loan. Hardy said the money was to finance a pipemaking plant in Hazelton, Pa., for the Hazelton Steel and Tubing Company. Moreover, he said, the Defense Production Administration, which also approved the loan, granted the stockholders permission to write off for tax purposes 85 per cent of the construction costs in five years.

The Subcommittee first heard testimony from DPA officials. Byron W. Woodside, director of the agency's business expansion office, said the loan had been approved in February after it was recommended by the NPA, on the condition that the company raise another $1 million.

The Hazelton loan applicants were identified as Benjamin S. Dowd, Martin C. Charles and James H. Hopkins.

J. F. Williams, an examiner of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation which actually made the approved loans under the Defense Production Act, testified that he had urged NPA to turn down the application. He said the applicants had presented a financial statement showing that they had only $600 in cash and a 27-acre plot which was provided by a community development group. The examiner said the men valued the land at $100,000 but that investigators for his office said it was worth only $13,850.

Under terms of the loan, if all went well, Hardy observed, the three men would become "multi-millionaires" in a few years.

Loans to Steel Firms

Blanket approval by the NPA of government defense loans to 48 steel companies, representing $469,266,643 for new plant facilities, was brought to light April 5 by H. C. McCoy, NPA's assistant chief, in testimony before the Hardy Subcommittee.

The 48 applications were approved by the NPA, McCoy admitted, even before technical investigative reports had been completed by the agency's staff.

"We felt we should take these applications on their face value," he declared, adding he considered them all "very sound cases." He acknowledged, however, that "some reports from the (NPA) iron and steel division" ultimately had been adverse to "some of the applicants."

The 48 applicants were not named, with the exception of the Hazelton Steel and Tubing Company. McCoy admitted that the NPA technical review of the Hazelton loan had charged misstatements of fact on the application, but he added he considered the technical report "irrelevant" and of "minor importance." The need for pipe and tubular products was more important, he said.

The Lone Star Steel Company of Dallas, Tex., was described as receiving $73 million from the government in defense expansion loans plus tax benefits even though it needed no such incentives, in testimony April 9 before the Subcommittee.

Officials of the RFC, headed by then Chairman W. Elmer Harber and Examiner J. F. Williams, testified that Lone Star first applied in 1949 for a regular loan of $67 million to finance new steel-making facilities for a blast furnace acquired as war surplus for $7.5 million in 1947. The plant, built by the government in World War II at a cost of about $30 million, never had been put into operation. The RFC witnesses explained RFC approved the regular loan on terms which Lone Star never met.

Certificate of Necessity

In 1951, after the Defense Production Act was passed, the company applied for a defense loan and was granted $50 million in return for a mortgage on its property. Another $23,425,201 loan was granted by the National Production Authority as a defense loan — also through the RFC — making a total of $73,425,201.

NPA, moreover, granted Lone Star a "certificate of necessity" entitling it to accelerated amortization of 85 per cent of the cost of its plant for tax purposes. Thus certified under the Revenue Act of 1950, applicants could amortize their plants by deducting the cost from income taxes within five years, instead of the 20 years customarily allowed.

Assistant NPA Administrator Frank R. Creedon told the Subcommittee the Lone Star application for tax certification was among the first of the 48 steel company applications approved by the NPA under the defense policy of speeding up new steel production.

Report

On concluding the hearings, the Subcommittee drafted a report, which was approved by the House Executive Expenditures Committee. Released May 25, it sharply criticized the administration of both the accelerated tax amortization program and direct government loans to finance plant expansion. Administration of the two programs has been "both unsound and detrimental to the public interest in many respects," the report said.

The Committee noted that in the first five months of the tax program, certificates of necessity were issued for $5 billion worth of plants. It declared established administrative regulations and procedures and safeguards had not been followed.

Criticizing, in addition, the government's expansion loans program, the Committee suggested that Congress might want to discontinue this direct loan program and substitute either a guaranteed loan program or direct government construction and ownership of defense plants, or both.

Detroit Hearings

Starting a new phase of its probe of defense spending, the Subcommittee heard in Detroit testimony about favors to federal employees extended by contract seekers.

The group's first witness, Brig. Gen. David J. Crawford, chief of the Army's tank arsenal in Detroit, said July 23 he accepted free use of a Washington hotel suite from an agent for two companies holding $33,000,000 worth of ordnance contracts.

Rep. John F. Shelley (D Calif.), a member of the Subcommittee declared July 24 that the Congressional probe had revealed enough irregularities at both the Detroit Tank Arsenal and the Ordnance Tank-Automotive Center to warrant an FBI and Treasury Department investigation.

Army Secretary Frank Pace announced July 30 the removal of Brig. Gen. Crawford from the command of the Detroit tank arsenal. Rep. Hardy called the action "timely, appropriate and in keeping with the facts disclosed" by the investigation.

Evidence of "highly irregular conduct" on the part of procurement officials at the Rossford Army Depot, Toledo, Ohio, was found by the Subcommittee, Chairman Hardy announced Aug. 16.

Rep. Alvin F. Weichel (R Ohio), whose district includes the depot, charged that the Rossford unit paid private contractors as much as $3,600 each to repair army motor vehicles, even though the depot has parts and equipment for the repairs.

Further hearings and a second report were planned by the Hardy group.

RFC "Influence" Investigation

Summary — A subcommittee of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee completed an investigation into the operation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that produced widely publicized charges of favoritism and "influence" in awarding RFC loans.

The investigation started in 1950 and was scheduled, after two extensions, to end Jan. 31, 1951. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, p. 646.) However, the Senate, Jan. 29 approved a bill (S Res. 17) by J. William Fulbright (D Ark.), Subcommittee Chairman, to extend the investigation to May 1 and authorize expenditure of an additional $20,000. Approval was on voice vote.

An interim report covering phases of the 1950 investigation was filed by the Subcommittee Feb. 2. A final report and minority views were sent to the Senate by the full Banking and Currency Committee Aug. 20. The majority report recommended reorganization of the RFC. Two Republicans signed a minority report which criticized the Administration for permitting irregular loan procedures.

Members of the Subcommittee were Fulbright, Burnet R. Maybank, (D S.C.), chairman of the full Banking and Currency Committee, J. Allen Frear, Jr. (D Del.), Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), Homer E. Capehart (R-Ind.) and John W. Bricker (R Ohio). During the 1950 phase of the investigation, Charles W. Tobey (R N.H.) was on the committee. In 1951 Bricker replaced Tobey.

The Subcommittee held many hearings in 1951. The group questioned the RFC directors, businessmen who had obtained loans, a Presidential assistant, many minor government officials and several alleged "influence" men.

Charges of influence brought out in the investigation were heralded as ammunition for the 1952 Presidential campaign. The "mink coat incident," in which a White House secretary acquired an expensive mink coat, became an anti-Administration catch phrase.

The Fulbright Subcommittee turned over to the Investigation Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments the job of investigating reports that the Democratic and Republican National Committee Chairmen brought pressure on RFC. The Democrat later resigned. The investigation of a former Congressman's dealings in U.S. surplus ships also was turned over to the Investigations Subcommittee. (See page 504.)

Background — The Fulbright Subcommittee opened its investigation in April, 1950, after the Senate approved the study Feb. 8 and provided $50,000 to finance it. Hearings were held throughout the year, concentrating on the Texmass Petroleum Company Dallas, Tex.; The Lustron Corp., Columbus, Ohio, and the Waltham Watch Co.

When the hearings opened, the RFC was run by a Board of Directors: Harley Hise, chairman; Walter L. Dunham; Harvey J. Gunderson; Henry A. Mulligan and William E. Willett.

Mulligan retired April 30. Hise and Gunderson resigned Aug. 9. To take their places, Mr. Truman appointed W. E. Harber, chairman, and C. Edward Rowe and Walter E. Cosgriff, members.

The five directors were renominated for new terms in 1951. But early in the year the President sent Congress a proposal for reorganization of the RFC. His plan was to abolish the five-man Board of Directors and substitute a single Administrator. This proposal encountered opposition in Congress but was put into effect. (See page 339.) No action was taken during the year on the nomination of the five directors.

W. Stuart Symington was appointed to be the new single head of the RFC and was confirmed by the Senate. He took over May 7, and the Board of Directors stepped down.

FIRST REPORT

On Feb. 2, 1951, the Banking and Currency Subcommittee which had conducted the 1950 investigation into RFC lending practices made its report to the full Committee. The Subcommittee, headed by Fulbright, said its findings indicated that "influence which persons outside of the RFC have over individual members of the Board of Directors" was related to "improper use of the corporation's vast (lending) authority."

"Only a drastic action can restore the integrity of RFC," the Subcommittee said.

The report said the Fulbright group intended to make further investigations in 1951 of certain loans made by the RFC.

It noted that "specific allegations of favoritism" directed at RFC Directors Walter L. Dunham and William E. Willett were made in testimony before the Subcommittee. Willett "came up through the ranks in RFC," according to the Subcommittee report, and Dunham "attributes his appointment" to the RFC directorship to "Cy Bevan, a Detroit lawyer who was formerly the Democratic National Committeeman for the State of Michigan."

Joseph H. Rosenbaum, "leading member" of the Washington law firm of Goodwin, Rosenbaum, Meacham and Bailen, was quoted in sworn testimony as having claimed that Willett and Dunham were "in his hip pocket", the report said. Donald S. Dawson, personnel adviser to the President and formerly personnel officer of the RFC, tried "to dominate" the agency, according to testimony given to the Subcommittee.

Named "Most Frequently"

E. Merl Young, who rose from a $1,080-a-year government messenger job in 1940 to be an $18,000-a-year vice president of the Lustron Corp. and a $10,000-a-year official of F. L. Jacobs Co., (both RFC borrowers) in 1948, was named "most frequently in the reports of alleged influence," the Subcommittee said. Young was the husband of Loretta Young, a White House secretary until 1951.

Rex C. Jacobs, president of F. L. Jacobs Co. of Detroit and James C. Windham, treasurer and director of the same company, had been closely associated with Rosenbaum, Dawson, Young and Dunham. Windham was an aide to George Allen, then an RFC director, at a time when a $3 million loan was made to the Jacobs concern, and joined the company shortly afterwards, the report said.

"Investigation by the Subcommittee indicates that close personal relationships exist between Dawson, Young, Jacobs, Windham, and RFC Directors Dunham and Willett. These friends, with others, constitute a group who appear to have exercised influence over the RFC," the Subcommittee reported.

C. Edward Rowe of Athol, Mass., an RFC director, was "regarded as Willett's candidate" for the position, and was understood to be acceptable to White House Assistant Dawson for that reason, the report stated. Rowe was appointed to the RFC in November, 1950, less than four months after a controversial $300,000 loan was made to his business, the Harrington and Richardson Arms Co. of Worcester, Mass., according to the Subcommittee.

Former Rep. Joseph E. Casey, (D Mass.) was reported as being "instrumental in bringing about Rowe's appointment," the report declared. Casey had been a key legal representative on RFC matters for the Goodwin, Rosenbaum, Meacham and Bailen law firm and "shared to the extent of 20 per cent in the fees which the firm collected from the presentation of loan applications or the conduct of other business with the RFC."

RFC Affairs Discussed

The Subcommittee said it was RFC Director Dunham's practice to "discuss the affairs of RFC freely with representatives of the Democratic National Committee, and to give special attention to matters in which the Committee was interested."

It also reported that an introduction of Leon B. Parker, a Kansas City lawyer, to Dunham by the Democratic National Committee "may have been deemed a sufficient warranty of the character and financial responsibility" to justify the sale to Starrett Television Corp. for $700,000 of the assets of a bankrupt Kansas City juke box manufacturer, which had borrowed $1,500,000 from RFC. The sale to Starrett was rescinded by the RFC directors in November, 1950, after an official of Starrett was sentenced to prison for income tax evasion.

The Subcommittee also listed several loans and transactions of the RFC which indicated "improper use of the corporation's authority", and said that "important loans were made upon the affirmative vote of a minority of the board members," often over "the adverse advice of the corporation's most experienced examiners and reviewing officials."

Most of the individuals mentioned in the Subcommittee report defended their actions. The Subcommittee offered all of them an opportunity to testify.

Distortion Charged

The Subcommittee issued a statement Feb. 7 confirming a denial by Casey that he had received any fees in connection with RFC loans after Rowe became an RFC Director. Casey said that his conduct in connection with RFC had been "twisted" in the report. "I've been virtuous, positively saintly in this," he said.

(At the time, Casey was registered under the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act. In April, 1948, he registered as working for the Committee for Equalization of Tobacco Taxes, at a $15,000 fee, for the rest of that year. In February, 1950, he filed as representative of the Radio-Television Manufacturers Association, for the duration of 1950, and was to receive $5,000 retainer fee and $1,000 monthly from that client.

(Casey, who served in the House from 1934 to 1943, also served as a consultant to President Roosevelt from 1942 to 1944. He has been associate counsel of the Boston law firm of Warren, Garfield, Whiteside & Lamson.)

President's Comment

President Truman had sharp comment on the report at his press conference Feb. 8. He called it asinine, and said he wanted to talk to Subcommittee Chairman Fulbright and the authors of the report at the first opportunity. He said that the chairman left town when he found out that Mr. Truman wanted to see him.

The President voiced complete confidence in Dawson and said he did not think Dawson should seek a public hearing before the Subcommittee. It should have given Dawson an opportunity to testify before issuing the report, he said.

Mr. Truman recalled that he had sent a plan to the previous Congress calling for the transfer of the RFC to the Department of Commerce, and providing that the Secretary of Commerce be the loan administrator. The plan was rejected by the Senate July 6, 1950. — (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950 P. 372.) The President said that he was working on another reorganization plan similar to the one which had been rejected.

Fulbright replied from Miami, Fla., that the Subcommittee released its report only after giving the President "every opportunity to clean up the RFC."

Douglas and Frear, members of the Subcommittee, said the report was not intended to be a reflection on President Truman. Both indicated that they felt the report was founded on a factual investigation. Sen. Wallace F. Bennett (R Utah), a new member of the Subcommittee, said the President's description of the report as asinine was "not justified." Capehart called Truman's remark "as bad as his statement that the Hiss matter was a red herring."

Bricker called for the dismissal of Dawson on the basis of the report. Sen. Andrew F. Schoeppel (R Kan.) and Rep. Pat Sutton (D Tenn.) called for Justice Department investigation of the charges. Schoeppel expressed the belief that there should be a grand jury investigation, ultimately.

Ex-President Herbert C. Hoover, in a letter Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. (R Mass.) made public Feb. 8, called for a reform of "abuses and mal-organization" in federal agencies like the RFC.

Legislation Endorsed

The Fulbright report also endorsed a bill (S 514) providing for a single RFC head instead of the Board of Directors under which the agency then was functioning. While the full Senate Banking and Currency Committee authorized the submission of the report to the Senate, it "reserved a decision" on the merits of the bill itself. Also reserving his decision on the measure, Capehart (R) declined to sign the Fulbright document. He was the only Senator who failed to sign it.

The reorganization measure itself was introduced by Fulbright after he had been authorized to do so by the Subcommittee on Jan. 4. Besides abolishing the five-man Board, S 514 was drawn to place administration in the hands of an RFC governor, who would have the assistance of a subordinate review board; forbid any borrower to hire an RFC employee within two years after getting a loan from the agency; and give Congress control over billions of dollars of RFC loans by requiring the agency to get its funds through Congressional appropriations instead of borrowing from the Treasury.

1951 HEARINGS

Within two weeks after the Senate Banking and Currency Committee issued the report filed by the Subcommittee which had investigated Reconstruction Finance Corporation lending practices in 1950, the group decided to hold a new series of public hearings. Persons named in the report would be given an opportunity to testify.

On Feb. 21, the group opened the hearings. Charges and denials immediately erupted. Sen. Charles W. Tobey (R N.H.) concluded that "one of these men is a liar" after hearing conflicting testimony Feb. 21 from Ross Bohannon, Dallas attorney, and E. Merl Young, former RFC examiner, relative to Young's role in an attempt by Texmass Petroleum Co. to get an $18 million loan from RFC. The company, which later entered receivership, finally received a 10.1 million loan in May, 1950.

Bohannon, Texmass counsel, testified that Young demanded a fee of $85,000 to help get the loan for Texmass. Young denied that he had ever made any proposal to Bohannon. He said that Bohannon wanted him and William M. Boyle, then a Washington attorney and later chairman of the Democratic National Committee, to work on the loan. Young testified he talked it over with Boyle who advised him "to forget it." Both testified that Boyle was not directly contacted by Texmass officials.

Bohannon said Young had been recommended to him in 1949 as a man having great influence with the RFC by John B. Skiles, personnel manager of the RFC Dallas office, who resigned in January, 1951.

According to a memorandum signed by L. B. Glidden, then manager of the Dallas agency, Bohannon had advised him that Texmass officials wanted Young investigated. An investigation was begun by a former FBI man, but discontinued after the offices of Sens. Tom Connally (D Tex.) and Lyndon B. Johnson (D Tex.) advised Bohannon that no outside aid was needed at RFC if the Texmass loan was meritorious. Bohannon said his firm received $35,000 for processing the loan.

Denies Receiving Fees

Young told the Subcommittee that he had never received any fees or commissions from RFC loan applicants. He denied that an RFC loan applicant had given his wife, a White House stenographer, a "white mink or ermine coat," as charged by Rep. Pat Sutton (D Tenn.). He said he bought the coat from a furrier who had once applied for an RFC loan which he did not get.

William E. Willett, RFC director also criticized by the Subcommittee for alleged favoritism, denied that Young tried to sell influence with the RFC, and said he believed Young's version of the conversation with Bohannon. Willett said he had always been opposed to the Texmass loan. "If you felt very strongly against this loan, I can't imagine why you didn't denounce it," Fulbright interjected while Willett was testifying.

Young said he worked for both Lustron Corp., a housing prefabricating firm, and F. L. Jacobs Co., a Detroit industrial plant, both RFC borrowers, to the knowledge of each company. Carl G. Strandlund, Lustron president, had told the Subcommittee previously that he did not know Young was working for the Jacobs Co., a business competitor, while employed by Lustron as a vice president. Young testified that he thought Lustron paid his expenses while he was on a 10-day political tour for the Democrats in 1948.

Willett's "Personal Favor"

Willett told the Subcommittee Feb. 22 that he departed from usual RFC procedure "as a personal favor" to C. Edward Rowe, an RFC loan applicant who was named an RFC director in September, 1950, four months after his loan was approved.

Willett said he personally assigned the examiner who made the recommendations that the $300,000 loan be approved for Harrington and Richards Arms Co., of Worcester, Mass., in which Rowe had the principal interest. He defended his action on the ground that "Judge Rowe had been a personal friend of mine for years," that he did not have final authority to approve the loan (a majority of the five-man board must do so), and that the loan was good and has been repaid in full.

Willett also testified that he personally assigned Hubert B. Steele, an RFC examiner, to handle the loan application of the Central Iron and Steel Co. of Pennsylvania, which received loans totaling $6,300,000 from RFC. The loans were granted over the objection of the other examiners and reviewers who worked on it with the exception of Steele, who approved it. Subsequently Steele was hired at $15,000 a year by the Washington law firm of Goodwin, Rosenbaum, Meacham and Bailen, which represented Central at RFC.

Previously Willett disclaimed that he had ever "consciously yielded" to improper influence. He denied that he had been influenced by Donald Dawson, White House aide and former RFC personnel director, by Young, or by Joseph H. Rosenbaum, Robert Dudley or Joseph E. Casey, Washington attorneys.

Easier Terms Hinted

Chad Calhoun, vice president of the Kaiser-Frazer Corp., told the Committee Feb. 22 that his firm had been informed it could get easier terms on RFC loans if Boyle, then a Washington attorney, were hired as counsel. Calhoun spoke from a memorandum he said he made of a conversation between Rex Jacobs, Detroit manufacturer, and Edgar Kaiser, the K-F president. The memo said that Jacobs suggested the employment of Boyle.

Calhoun also testified that Walter L. Dunham had asked his help in obtaining confirmation as RFC director, requesting him to talk to Sen. Tobey. "I think it highly improper for Mr. Dunham to ask a borrower," Fulbright observed.

Jacobs testified that Dunham had told him about having a "set-to with one of Kaiser's men" and Dunham asked Kaiser "to handle matters himself." Jacobs said that he talked to Kaiser, but did not recall mentioning Boyle's name, although the name of Max Siskind, Boyle's former law partner, was mentioned.

Jacobs said that he had told Young to do what he could to help Kaiser get a loan, as the Kaiser company was a customer of Jacobs. When asked by Fulbright what he thought he could do, Jacobs said: "Not much, but if there was anything we could do, I wanted to do it."

Kaiser: Terms Tough

Kaiser said that Calhoun "probably drew certain conclusions" from his conversation with Jacobs. He did not mention Boyle's name in his testimony. Kaiser said that his company had dealt directly and exclusively with RFC officials and had received loans under terms "severe to the extent of being unreasonable."

Kaiser said his firm did employ E. C. Bevan, Detroit lawyer, and former Democratic National Committeeman from Michigan, who was a friend of Dunham, but only after Kaiser had talked it over with Dunham who cautioned him that no one could influence the RFC loan application. Kaiser had received $69 million in RFC loans. The Kaiser company did not hire either Young or Rosenbaum, the latter quoted in the Subcommittee report as claiming he had Willett and Dunham "in his hip pocket."

a week previously as a $50-a-day publicity man for the RFC. Kelly named his principal sponsor as James K. Vardaman, Jr., member of the Federal Reserve Board and former White House aide.

Questioning of RFC officials about the employment of Kelly then brought out that the White House had been given copies of RFC correspondence, including letters to the RFC from Congressmen. Three RFC officials — W. E. Harber, chairman of the board, Willett and Arthur Merritt, executive manager for the board of directors — all said they did not know who had asked for the Congressional-RFC correspondence.

The wife of White House Aide Dawson, named in the Subcommittee's report as one of those seeming to exert influence on RFC directors, then was summoned to Capitol Hill. Mrs. Dawson, who was in charge of RFC files, said she supplied the photostats at the request of Donald M. Smith, assistant executive manager of RFC.

700 to 900 Letters

Smith said he got his instructions from Harber and delivered the correspondence on two occasions to Dawson at the White House. From 700 to 900 letters were involved, he estimated.

The President's request for the files came after the Subcommittee issued its report of Feb. 2, according to Mrs. Dawson and Walter E. Cosgriff, an RFC director. Mrs. Dawson said the letters went back to about 1941.

The Senators pressed Harber and Willett for more information about the President's request. Harber finally said he thought Dawson had made the original request to RFC.

During the session, Subcommittee Chairman J. William Fulbright, (D Ark.) challenged RFC directors to prove that he or his colleagues on the Subcommittee had exercised "improper influence"

Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) announced publicly that early in his Senate career, because he "didn't know better" at the time, he had urged RFC approval of three loans. He turned over to the Senators a file he said contained all his correspondence with RFC and demanded that his colleagues investigate. Other members backed Fulbright and Douglas and invited scrutiny of their RFC correspondence.

After the disclosures of White House interest in RFC files, the President's office issued a statement saying he "knows of no evidence of illegal influence of the RFC" by his staff members or Congressmen.

The correspondence was sought by the President for study in his reorganization of the RFC, said Mr. Truman's press secretary. The reorganization plan for that agency went to Congress Feb. 19 and was subsequently put into effect.

Following the Presidential statement, Fulbright commented "it is setting a low level if our only goal for official conduct is that it be legal instead of illegal". His group had found no outright violations of the law, but "many acts bordering on illegality". Fulbright said.

Young in Spotlight

Other testimony Feb. 23 focused on E. Merl Young. A central figure in the RFC inquiry, Young denied posing as the nephew of the President. In this he contradicted testimony by Edward P. Morgan, director of price control enforcement and a former FBI agent. Morgan had investigated Young at the request of Bohannon, Dallas attorney who handled the $10 million RFC loan to the Texmass Petroleum Company in 1949 and who had testified that Young offered to assist in obtaining the loan for an $85,000 fee. Young denied this.

J. Edward Johnson of Dallas, a partner in Bohannon's law firm, testified Feb. 23, backing Bohannon's statements.

Denying charges that he had claimed to have two RFC directors "in his hip pocket", Joseph H. Rosenbaum, Washington lawyer, read Senators a 14-page reply. Rosenbaum was a principal partner of the Washington law firm which the Subcommittee said was most frequently mentioned in connection with the alleged influencing of the RFC. He said: he had never met or talked to most of the directors including one of those he was supposed to have "in his hip pocket"; his firm, in its RFC business, had lost 18 out of 30 loan requests; and his firm's employment of Hubert Steele, an RFC examiner whose favorable report had blocked disapproval of a loan for a client, was after Steele had decided to resign from RFC.

At one point, Sen. Douglas flayed "the brazen attitude of the RFC" and said there had been "a chain of cases" in which RFC employees helped to approve loans, then took jobs with the borrowers.

The Subcommittee Feb. 26 heard John B. Skiles, L. B. Glidden, B. M. Lindsley, all former RFC officials of the Dallas office, and Paul J. Cotter, head of the RFC investigative staff. The three former employees had wrangled over operation of the Dallas office, according to their statement.

Cotter, after an investigation, had recommended the discharge of Lindsley and Skiles. Glidden told the Senators that the "RFC stinks."

Sen. Tobey then denounced RFC as a "political trading bureau" and recommended that it be abolished.

Willett, a board member, also questioned Feb. 26 about the Dallas office, said the RFC Board had been a "bad" one and that he was "as bad as the rest."

The Board had not followed recommendations that two Dallas officials be fired, Willett said, because it could not come to an agreement. All three —Glidden "the weak manager," "the hotheaded Skiles and the weak Lindsley" — should have been discharged, said Willett.

Skiles Suggested Young

Skiles said he had suggested to Bohannon, seeking the Texmass loan, that E. Merl Young might be of help. Skiles had the recommendation of Donald Dawson in getting the Dallas RFC job, in 1946.

Fulbright said he did not intend to call Dawson as a witness, since the President said Dawson should not reply.

"We're not looking for any quarrel with the President," he said.

Feb. 28 the Senate group delved into what Fulbright called "very succulent tidbits" of financial aid from Rosenbaum to Young. In the past 18 months, Young said, he bought a $52,000 home, a $9,540 fur coat for his wife, and an interest in several business firms.

The mink coat was paid for by Rosenbaum, who handled the fur company's loan application to RFC, Fulbright said. The company — Gunther Jaeckle Co. of New York City— sought $175,000, but didn't get it.

The transactions Fulbright described included a Rosenbaum investment of $5,000 and loan of $11,000 to an insurance agency headed by Young; Young's purchase from Rosenbaum of 60 shares of Martin Investment Co. stock at $1 a share (the stock later advanced to $200 a share); a payment of $500 by Young to Rosenbaum for a half interest in a company from which Young shortly afterwards borrowed $32,000.

With other transactions, all of which involved Rosenbaum, the money Young borrowed came to $136,500. Young testified that all the loans still were outstanding.

Lustron Head Appears

On March 1, Carl Strandlund, former president of the Lustron Corp. which went bankrupt after borrowing $37.5 million from RFC, testified that "financial wolves" operating in an influence ring in the government, brought his prefabricated housing plant to ruin. He named Dunham, Young, and Rex Jacobs, Detroit manufacturer, as leaders of a "clique" trying to get control of the Lustron plant. RFC foreclosed after he resisted Dunham's demands that the enterprise be operated by an RFC-appointed committee, Strandlund asserted.

Strandlund said he hired Young at the suggestion of a former RFC Director, Harvey J. Gunderson. Three months after Young went on the payroll at $12,000 yearly, his salary was raised to $18,000 at the suggestion of former RFC Chairman Harley Hise, according to Strandlund.

The March 1 hearing produced a statement that Strandlund loaned Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis.) money at Pimlico in 1949 to bet on horse races and tore up checks McCarthy gave in repayment. Young gave the testimony. Strandlund said the check incident occurred at the Laurel race track, not Pimlico, and that Young wasn't present. He said McCarthy first had written a check for "about $100" and then decided he wanted "about $200". So, Strandlund said he tore up the first check and cashed the Senator's second, larger one.

Young insisted, however, he had testified about "what I saw." McCarthy gave his version after the hearing was closed. It was in line with Strandlund's — except that the amounts of the checks McCarthy said he gave were $50 and $100 respectively.

Testimony then turned to the "hip pocket" charges. Roy Fruehauf, Detroit trailer manufacturer, March 2 testified that Rosenbaum, the Washington attorney, had boasted to him that he had two RFC directors—Dunham and Willett — "in his hip pocket." Fruehauf then accused Dunham of blocking plans to save the Lustron housing enterprise from bankruptcy. He said he saw a connection between Dunham's alleged opposition to any reorganization plan and a claim that a Lustron negotiator refused to pay Rosenbaum $10,000. Fruehauf had a $3 million stake in the Lustron case, representing the unpaid balance on a trailer order his company had from the housing concern.

Rosenbaum entered denials, testifying he did not even know Dunham and never had seen him. His contacts with Willett, he said, had been few.

Hotel Firms' Loans

Focusing its attention March 5 on three RFC loans to hotel concerns in Miami Beach, Fla., the Subcommittee developed testimony that Sen. James E. Murray (D Mont.), Chairman of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee, interceded with the lending agency on behalf of one of the loans while his son, James A. Murray, a Washington attorney, was earning a $21,000 fee in this and the other loan cases.

Sen. Murray's name was brought into the probe in connection with a $1 million loan to the Sorrento Hotel in Miami Beach. A letter from Murray to Hise, then the RFC chairman, was put in the record. In it, Murray wrote that it was such cases of financial difficulties as the Sorrento's that concerned the agency. The other loans discussed at the day's hearing were $1.5 million to the Saxony, and $1 million to the Maxwell Company, dealers in hotel equipment. The fee paid the younger Murray was said to have covered all three cases.

Another of Murray's sons, Charles A. Murray, the Senator's administrative assistant, was said to have attended a conference between RFC Director Dunham and George M. Glassgold, the principal Sorrento attorney, two days before the loan was approved by the lending agency.

The statements about Murray were developed during questioning of Glassgold by Sen. Wallace F. Bennett (R Utah). Bennett labeled the Sorrento loan a "bail out." He said it was approved Oct. 27, 1949, after Murray's letter and after Glassgold and Charles Murray called on Dunham.

Testimony March 5 also developed that Hilton W. Robertson, an RFC examiner, who recommended approval of all three loans, was a "complimentary" guest, with his wife and daughter, at the Saxony Hotel for 10 days in January and February, 1950. Dawson, the White House aide, had the same guest status three times, — in December, 1949, and March and April, 1950, with a $30-a-day accommodation for a total of about 22 days.

Hotel Often "Host"

Robertson described his "complimentary" stay at the Saxony hotel. The story of Dawson's visits was brought out in a release by the Subcommittee of transcripts of testimony taken in closed session in February. George Sax of Chicago, the hotel owner, was then a witness. He had explained to the investigating group that the hotel often gave complimentary rooms to "leading" people, including Members of Congress.

Next day, Sen. Murray defended his intercession on behalf of the RFC's Sorrento loan, and demanded a complete summary of Congressional intercession with the RFC, by letter, telephone or interview, be put on the open record.

"As regards my son's participation in this matter," the Senator continued. "I want to state unequivocally that I treated the case just as I did any other case. He is a lawyer conducting proper and ethical services for his clients; and I can see no reason why, because, he is my son, I should treat him any differently than I would any other lawyer." He said his intervention with the RFC on behalf of Sorrento concerned a good financial risk and was "the same sort of representation to the RFC that I have made in many similar cases."

The facts were similar, he contended, to the facts involved in thousands of other cases handled by Members of Congress.

At the same time, Chairman Fulbright asked the RFC to make its own investigation into a publicized report that Rep. Frank W. Boykin (D Ala.) had influenced the agency to make a $1.7 million loan to the Mobile Paper Company of Mobile, Ala., a company with which Boykin's son was affiliated. Boykin, Fulbright said, had asked the Senate group to "investigate the loan very, very thoroughly," but it was decided to let the RFC do the job.

Dunham Denies Abuses

RFC Director Dunham, who was called for testimony behind closed doors because of a heart ailment, was revealed March 7 to have sworn he did not abuse his trust by allowing others to influence him on loans. He charged, nonetheless, that others —including members of a Washington "social group" which was close to the White House — "sought to use me."

He named Dawson as a member of the group, but specifically insisted "I can recall no instance where he sought to influence my judgment on a RFC loan."

Besides Dawson, Dunham named the members of what he called the "social group" Young, James C. Windham, a former RFC employee, Rex Jacobs, Detroit industrialist and Windham's employer, and RFC Director Willett. He said also, that he had received many RFC loans applicants sent by Democratic National Committee Chairman William M. Boyle, Jr., and other party officials, but he insisted he sought only to give the visitors "fair treatment." If that is "influence," he said, "then it existed."

Dunham denied that he had blocked a Lustron reorganization scheme and told the Subcommittee that as soon as he could quit the RFC without appearing to be "under fire" he would do so.

Called to testify again March 8, Dunham said that a fellow director, Rowe, had urged him to resign and "become the fall guy" for the Senate investigation. Fulbright said documents to back his story had been filed with the Subcommittee by Dunham.

In the course of the session, the Subcommittee dug into the official diary Dunham had supplied and asked him whether Presidential Assistant John R. Steelman had urged him to back a garage and bomb shelter loan to a Boston concern. The questioning was based on the diary's word that Steelman once telephoned, saying President Truman thought a proposed $12 million grant to the Motor Parkway, which wanted to put the project under Boston Common, justified RFC interest. Dunham, who questioned the loan's legality, said Steelman had not asked his support.

Central Steel Loans

The Fulbright Subcommittee hearings March 12 turned back to the $6,300,000 in loans to the Central Iron and Steel Co. of Harrisburg, Pa. The Central Steel loans had been granted, according to previous testimony, after RFC Director Willett substituted Hubert B. Steele as examiner on the loan. Other examiners had recommended against it. Steele joined the law firms of Goodwin, Rosenbaum, Meacham and Bailen and Joseph E. Casey a month after the second loan was authorized, according to his testimony, at $15,000 salary. Steele maintained he had planned to leave RFC for some time.

Joseph H. Rosenbaum, who the Subcommittee said wielded influence at RFC, detailed the sale of 2,400 tons of steel which he obtained from Central in 1950. It was sold to Atlantic Basin Iron Co. of Brooklyn, N.Y., a corporation set up by Rosenbaum and E. Merl Young. Atlantic Basin sold the steel to Chicago Iron and Steel Company, a warehouse firm, at a $75,000-$80,000 profit, he said.

Sen. Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) said the steel went into the "black market" and that "it was simply a pay-off to somebody. Somebody got $75,000 for doing nothing," he said. Rosenbaum denied the charge.

Former Rep. Joseph E. Casey (D Mass.) told the Committee March 12 that he, Rosenbaum and others, made $2,800,000 by investing $100,000 to buy up surplus government tankers. Casey said his profit amounted to $270,000 on an investment of $20,000. He had to pay only a capital gains tax on the sale, he said.

Surplus Ships

Casey said he organized the American Overseas Tanker Co. about five years earlier, putting up $20,000 capital. Rosenbaum and others raised $80,000 more. The company purchased five surplus tankers from the government, floated a $10 million loan to pay for the ships, and then signed a five-year contract to lease the ships to Standard Oil Company of New Jersey on a monthly rental basis.

Casey denied that he was part of an alleged "influence ring" operating at the RFC. And he challenged "inferences" that he had anything to do with the appointment of Rowe as director of RFC and, as a result, had benefited from fees on RFC loan applications. Rowe and Casey were formerly law partners.

Casey said he ceased to practice before RFC after Rowe's appointment.

Rep. Wayne L. Hays (D Ohio) charged on the House floor March 13 that Guy G. Gabrielson, chairman of the GOP National Committee "apparently did a little influence peddling himself" with the RFC. He said two Senators, whom he did not name, exerted pressure to get RFC loans for Carthage Hydrocol Company, Inc., New York, of which Gabrielson was president and counsel.

The company received $18,500,000 in three loans from 1946-1949, according to Hays. Gabrielson "charged his own company . . . $100,000 for his services in securing these loans for it," Hays said. The loans were all granted before Gabrielson became GOP chairman on Aug. 4, 1949.

The Fulbright Subcommittee March 13 invited Hays to name the two Senators whom he accused of "influencing" the Carthage loan, in testimony at a public hearing. Hays replied the same day: "The truth or substantial truth of what I said can be easily verified by you or by any member of your Subcommittee or your staff making an inquiry of the RFC."

March 14 Rep. Pat Sutton (D Tenn.) said Gabrielson received $136,075.43 in salary, legal fees, and expenses from Carthage since 1945. Hays said he thought Gabrielson actually received about $162,000 from the company, formed to make high-octane gasoline from natural gas.

Gabrielson denied the loan-influence charge as "an unmitigated lie."

Challenged in Senate

The loans also came in for discussion in the Senate, March 15 when Capehart and Sen. Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) accused Sen. Douglas of saying that the probe had "covered up for some Republicans". Douglas said that he had been "extremely dubious" about the loan. Fulbright said "we could have headlined the loan" but gave Capehart "a break" and let him question Gabrielson about it.

"Let's quit intimating that Republicans were shielded," Capehart declared. "Let's name them. I challenge you to name them," he said. "I demand that the Committee meet . . . and you prove it."

The Subcommittee decided March 19 to continue its probe indefinitely. Although Fulbright said he wanted to wind up the investigation as scheduled April 30, he was overruled by the other Subcommittee members.

Fulbright had previously suggested that another committee continue the investigation and broaden it to include moral standards in government generally.

The Subcommittee voted to accept an offer of $20,000 in Banking and Currency Committee funds to continue its inquiry.

Dunham and Rowe

RFC Directors Rowe and Dunham gave the Subcommittee testimony March 19 about a draft of Dunham's letter of resignation.

Dunham and his secretary, Mrs. Florence M. Smoot, told the Subcommittee that Rowe urged Dunham to resign on the ground that he had been "crucified" by Congress, because he had voted for the Lustron and Texmass loans. They said their testimony would be backed up by Mrs. Adeleen Mott, a stenographer in Dunham's office.

Mrs. Smoot said that Rowe came into her office Feb. 20 while Dunham was in Florida and suggested that she revise a letter of resignation which Dunham had written before he left. Rowe proposed that the statement be included: "I am being crucified on the Hill because I voted for the Lustron and Texmass loans," according to her testimony. She said that Rowe directed her to deliver the letter as revised, to Dawson at the White House.

She said she telephoned Dunham about Rowe's proposed revision, and Dunham angrily directed her not to "let that letter go." She quoted Dunham as telling her "there is something funny going on there."

Rowe conceded that he had drafted a possible letter for resignation for Dunham, but said he did so because he was concerned about Dunham's health. He denied that he had urged immediate delivery of the letter to Dawson. He also denied that he intended to make Dunham the "goat" or "fall guy" for the investigation, and said that Dunham had apologized to him for so testifying.

Joseph W. McIntyre, an assistant to Rowe, told the Subcommittee he did not hear Rowe urge Mrs. Smoot to deliver the letter to Dawson immediately. Mrs. Mott filed a statement with the Subcommittee that Rowe talked over the letter with Mrs. Smoot but she did not recall that Rowe asked Mrs. Smoot to deliver it to Dawson.

Truman Urged Cleanup

Rowe also testified that President Truman told him in 1950 the RFC "needed to be cleaned up" and that the President urged him to become an RFC director and "go on over there and do a job."

Rowe demanded that the Subcommittee withdraw its criticism linking him to an alleged "influence ring" with White House contacts. He said an "exhaustive investigation" would prove he had acted in a "perfectly ethical and legal manner."

He defended the RFC loan negotiated to his company, Harrington and Richardson Arms Co., Worcester, Mass., as "proper and sound." A $300,000 loan was granted to the company shortly before Rowe became a director. Fulbright said that a study of RFC practices indicated that "concessions" were made to Rowe relative to this loan.

RFC Director Cosgriff and Willard E. Unzicker, who resigned as assistant controller March 16, urged immediate reorganization of the agency to restore employee morale, when they appeared before the Subcommittee March 19.

Cosgriff, who had not been criticized by the Subcommittee, said all RFC directors should resign, because they were tainted with "guilt by association." He favored an administrator for the agency.

Unzicker urged abolition of the five-man board and immediate reorganization; because he said, the morale of RFC employees was so low they would "walk out almost in a body" if they could do so.

He said he resigned because the agency was in "an administrative mess" and because demands made on him by Donald W. Smith, deputy executive manager, were "impossible of performance." He had been with RFC since 1932, and testified his experience with the agency convinced him that it had rendered "valuable service to the country."

Casey Refusal

Former Rep. Casey appeared again March 28 but refused to tell the Subcommittee further details of a transaction in surplus government tankers.

Casey contended that the Subcommittee was not constitutionally authorized to consider the matter. (The RFC was not involved in the tanker transactions.)

Casey said he and others who participated in the transaction would willingly present details to a Congressional committee which would have proper jurisdiction over maritime matters. But, he said, to discuss the subject before the RFC Subcommittee would taint the ship deal with "the flavor" of RFC.

Casey refused to tell who his colleagues were on the ground that the Fourth Amendment guaranteed them protection from unreasonable search and seizure.

The Fulbright Subcommittee voted 5-2 April 4 to ask the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments to investigate the transactions involving Casey. Capehart and Bricker voted against the move. They wanted the Commerce Committee, of which they were members, to handle the probe.

Clyde R. Hoey (D N.C.), chairman of the Expenditures Subcommittee on Investigations said his group would start work immediately. No public hearings were held during the session.

Truman Conversation

The RFC probers heard Sen. Tobey present new material "related to the RFC but not to a loan" at a closed hearing of the Subcommittee April 4.

Tobey made his story public April 11 when he told the Senate that he had received two telephone calls from President Truman, which he recorded, about the RFC probe. In the original conversation, Tobey related, Mr. Truman said some one was lying, and should be punished "whether it was his man or somebody else."

Then, Tobey stated, he said that he had "at least 300 letters" from Senators and Congressmen in his possession and "he also had good information that a good many of these got fees" for obtaining RFC approval of specific loans.

In the second conversation, Tobey said, the President disclaimed that he had evidence about "payoffs" to Congressmen for obtaining RFC loans.

"I confess I was amazed at the disparity between his original definite statement and his last statement to me disclaiming he did have such evidence," Tobey said. In a talk with the President at the White House later, Mr. Truman told him he had decided not to make public his information because it would "only reflect on Congress," Tobey said. The Senator said he did not think the President was attempting to "put pressure" on him.

Tobey's disclosure that he had recorded his telephone conversations with the President prompted a quick reaction from the White House. The President thought it was "outrageous," according to his press secretary, Joseph Short. "As far as the President is concerned, every word can be made public," Short said.

Tobey Denies Impropriety

Tobey denied that there was any impropriety in making the recording. He did not have a warning signal on his recorder, he said.

In an unrecorded telephone conversation between the President and Tobey April 10, Tobey said, Mr. Truman accused the New Hampshire Republican of trying to impeach him.

"Now, let me tell you this, Senator," Tobey quoted Mr. Truman as saying, "if you want to have me impeached, you just go right ahead and I'll help you." Tobey said that he intended to do "nothing of the sort" when he disclosed the conversation April 12.

Former Sen. Burton K. Wheeler (D Mont.), appeared before the Subcommittee April 10 to say that he talked to Tobey about Dawson. Wheeler testified that David Niles, another White House assistant, asked him to talk to Tobey because Dawson is "a good guy and a good public servant" and Niles wanted Tobey "to go easy on Dawson."

Wheeler added that "Tobey got excited about it and said, 'Oh God, this is the palace guard. I don't like this.' " Wheeler denied that he was trying to "bring any pressure" on either Tobey or the Subcommittee.

Congressmen's Letters

The Senate Banking and Currency Committee April 17 assigned to the RFC Subcommittee the task of determining whether Members of Congress used improper influence in writing letters to the lending agency.

Fulbright said the first step would be an examination by staff members of photostatic copies of the 800 or so letters written to the RFC by Congressmen in recent years in connection with loans.

RFC BILLS

While the Fulbright Subcommittee continued its investigation of the RFC, the full Banking and Currency Committee opened a series of hearings on bills to determine the future of the lending agency.

Before the Committee was a bill (S 1376) by Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) to abolish the RFC and a bill (S 515) by Fulbright to continue the agency under a single head and to require that all loans be made "substantially" in the public interest.

Former President Herbert C. Hoover was the first witness when these hearings opened April 30. He said the RFC should be liquidated because it had been making "risky" loans and because "favoritism and corruption" had cropped up in its loan operations.

Requirements Relaxed

Hoover said that the RFC was created by Congress Jan. 22, 1932, during his administration, to provide emergency loans for financial institutions. Requirements had since been relaxed, he said, so that the RFC undertook to finance "almost anything . . . on most any terms it pleases."

Byrd and Fulbright testified in support of their bills. Fulbright said April 27 that credit facilities simply were not available to small businesses, particularly in the South. Byrd said May 1 that RFC's lending operations were a "fountainhead of inflation." RFC offered "too great a temptation to political camp followers," he said.

Byrd read into the record letters from Jesse Jones, former RFC chairman, and from Gov. James F. Byrnes of South Carolina favoring the abolition of the agency.

Marriner S. Eccles, then Federal Reserve Board Governor, who testified in favor of the Byrd bill April 27, called RFC a "socialistic" operation which fed inflation.

Threat To Free Enterprise

"Government participation" in direct lending to the private economy or in direct ownership "is socialistic in nature . . . If continued and expanded, it will weaken and ultimately destroy the private free enterprise system," he said.

James L. Fly, former chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, asked the Committee to investigate loans made to Henry J. Kaiser enterprises on the grounds that Kaiser's firms had received preferential treatment.

William R. Chase and J. S. Ervin of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, and Justin Potter of the South Eastern Industrial Council, all opposed continuing RFC.

Horace V. Avery, Jacksonville, Fla., businessman who was a member of the RFC Florida advisory committee, said the Washington RFC office frequently approved loan applications which the Florida office had refused to recommend.

Small Business View

Wendell Berge, chairman of the Small Manufacturers Emergency Committee, told the Subcommittee May 22 that "big business and banking interests" wanted to abolish the RFC. If legislation were to end RFC lending functions, it would "be catastrophic" to small business, he said.

Ed Stevens, a Dawson, Ga., peanut butter manufacturer, testified that a $65,000 loan from RFC to his concern in 1933 had been the economic salvation of the community. With RFC's help "we're beginning to get us some shoes" in southern Georgia, he said.

Testimony in support of the agency also came from the Farmers Union, bankers from Lansing, Mich., and Waycross, Ga., the Mortgage Finance Committee of the National Association of Home Builders, and several businessmen whose companies benefited from RFC loans.

Reports Both Bills

The Banking Committee June 22 decided to give the Senate its choice between the two RFC bills. The Committee voted to send both measures to the floor without recommendation. S 515 was formally reported Aug. 20 and S 1376 was reported July 13. Neither saw action on the Senate floor; although a presidential RFC reorganization plan did become effective. (see Page 339.)

Dawson Testifies

Donald S. Dawson, Presidential assistant, agreed May 1 to testify before the Fulbright Subcommittee. He appeared May 10 and denied that he had ever tried to "dominate" the RFC.

"To the best of my knowledge, I have done nothing in connection with the RFC that is improper in any way," Dawson said. "I have at no time attempted to dominate or influence" any of the RFC directors.

Dawson, the President's adviser on patronage, said that all RFC appointments were first cleared with the Democratic National Committee. Asked if any positions were filled by persons named by the Committee, Dawson replied, "Well, we didn't hold it against them."

Dawson denied that he had ever used his White House connection to influence the awarding of RFC loans, including the $1,500,000 loan to the Saxony Hotel in Miami Beach, Fla. He said he had "nothing whatever to do" with the Saxony loan.

As to his free stays at the hotel, Dawson said that the hotel extended

"such courtesies to many people . . . including Members of the Senate." But he said he would not accept free lodging in the future.

He denied that he had participated in a conference at which plans were discussed to transfer control of the Lustron Corp. from Carl G. Strandlund to Rex Jacobs.

He said that he did not meet Jacobs until two years after Jacobs received his RFC loan, and that he only saw Jacobs "socially from time to time."

Didn't Help Young

He said that he had known E. Merl Young, Jacobs' Washington contract man with the RFC, since 1946, but that he had "never interceded with the RFC on behalf of Mr. Young. I have never supported any candidate for any RFC post at the suggestion or instance of Mr. Young," he said.

As for Joseph H. Rosenbaum, Dawson said he did not know him. Dawson said the Subcommittee had used "misleading language" in its report in naming Jacobs, Young, and Rosenbaum as members of an RFC influence ring with White House connections in Dawson.

Disclaiming influence, Dawson told the Subcommittee that President Truman had ignored his recommendation that Hise and Gunderson be reappointed RFC directors. Sometimes the President accepted his recommendations and sometimes he did not, Dawson said.

"No Impropriety . . ."

Dawson said "there were no indications there was a counterattack" to the RFC Senate probe when the White House ordered an investigation into Congressional correspondence with the RFC.

The President merely wanted to see what the correspondence looked like, Dawson said. Although there were strong letters in the files, Dawson said he had seen "nothing concerning a fee" or threats or promises in the Congressional files at RFC.

Dawson wound up his testimony May 13. He told the group:

"The proceedings should be full justification of every action I have taken. I think (they) clearly demonstrate that there has been no impropriety on my part."

"Strains Credulity"

Chairman Fulbright saw Dawson's testimony in a different light. "There's quite a difference of views on what is proper and improper," he said. "The Subcommittee has a set of standards different from those you employ."

Fulbright said that "it strains my credulity" to believe that Dawson did not have a "power of veto" over some RFC directors. And he added that Dawson did not deny "very close associations" with those who formed "a web of influence" over the RFC.

Fulbright said that although Dawson might not have been conscious of having any influence over RFC Directors Dunham and Willet, "my impression is that you had power of life and death over them in an economic sense."

Dawson told the Senator "you overestimate the importance of my position."

Congressional Letters

The Subcommittee decided May 28 not to make public several hundred letters which Members of Congress had written the RFC. The decision was unanimous.

Although some Members of Congress "undoubtedly" exercised pressure on the RFC, the Subcommittee reported, their "improprieties, if any" were not disclosed in their correspondence with the government lending agency.

Theodore Herz, Subcommittee staff member, said that 136 letters and telegrams were written to the RFC by Congressmen relative to a $72 million loan to the Lone Star Steel Co., of Daingerfield, Tex.

B & O Probe

Sen. Tobey May 31 called upon the Subcommittee to make a new study of an $80 million loan to the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. Tobey was not then a member of the Subcommittee, although he had served on it earlier.

An investigation of the loan was made in 1947 while Tobey was chairman of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, but a report on the probe was not released at the time.

The B & O loan was under investigation by the new RFC Administrator, W. Stuart Symington, who was following up a preliminary study done earlier by the RFC Board of Directors. Symington had asked the B & O to speed up payments on the loan, it was announced May 28.

On May 31 Fulbright rejected a suggestion by Tobey that the Subcommittee make a new study of the B & O loan. Fulbright said, "Nothing could be gained through a Congressional investigation," and recommended a Justice Department probe.

The Banking and Currency Committee released June 1 the long unpublished report accusing the RFC and the B & O of "collusive and irregular dealings" in connection with an $80 million RFC loan to the railroad.

The report was signed by Tobey, who recommended that the Justice Department investigate the loan. The report never was adopted by the full Committee.

Tobey had made the following conclusions in the report:

The RFC took greater risks than was necessary in its loan arrangements with the B & O.

The RFC was a party to collusive and irregular proceedings when the B & O filed a petition in bankruptcy in 1945. At the time the B & O could have reduced its loan by $40 million to $60 million, but diverted its funds to other uses, and the RFC was "fully aware" of the diversion.

Principals in the RFC-B & O negotiations included former RFC officials who took top posts with the B & O: Cassius M. Clay, Russell L. Snodgrass, Frederick E. Baukhages, and Stewart McDonald.

Banking Committee Chairman Burnet R. Maybank (D S.C.) turned the report over to the Justice Department June 2.

Central Iron

The RFC Subcommittee announced June 23 that it had written a history of RFC loans to Central Iron and Steel Co. of Harrisburg, Pa., and had turned it over to the Justice Department for study.

Kaiser-Frazer

The Subcommittee voted 4-1 July 12 to refer a report on the RFC loans to Kaiser-Frazer Corp. to the full Banking Committee for further consideration.

Chairman Fulbright and Sens. Douglas, Frear and Bricker voted in favor of referral; Capehart voted against it because, he said, "I do not believe we should single out one RFC borrower for a special report and let all others go scot free."

The report was sent to the full Committee July 19 and made public at the same time. It said the initial RFC loan of $34,400,000 made to K-F in 1949 was not in the public interest and should not have been made.

Although it recognized that denial of the loan would have resulted in liquidation of the new automobile enterprise, the report said; "the Subcommittee believes that the RFC should not have made the original loan. It does not believe that the interest of the general public was such as to justify the use of public funds to continue operations of Kaiser-Frazer as an automobile company."

Later two other RFC loans were made to K-F, $10 million in 1949 and $25 million in 1950.

The report said that no evidence was found that K-F employed "influence peddlers" to win loan approval, and the Subcommittee expressed confidence that the loans would be repaid.

Edgar F. Kaiser, president of the corporation, issued a statement July 19 that it was "gratifying" the Subcommittee "was cognizant of the complete integrity" of K-F, and added that under terms of the RFC act "the loan was in the public interest."

Approves Report

The Subcommittee also approved July 19 by a 3-2 vote a final report on its investigation into influence and favoritism in the RFC. The report was submitted to the parent Banking and Currency Committee July 30.

Fulbright, Douglas and Maybank signed the final report. The two GOP Subcommittee members, Capehart and Bricker, started work on a minority report on the Subcommittee's investigation.

Neither report was made public for several weeks.

In the meantime, on Aug. 1, Fulbright recommended that the Investigations Subcommittee of the Senate Expenditures Committee conduct an investigation into reports that Democratic National Committee Chairman William M. Boyle, Jr., had influenced an RFC loan to the American Lithofold Corp. of St. Louis.

According to the St. Louis Post Dispatch, the company had received the loan in 1949 only after political pressure was applied.

The Investigations Subcommittee ordered the investigation started Aug. 7. (See Page 508.)

FINAL REPORT

The Senate Banking and Currency Committee investigation of the RFC came to a formal end Aug. 20 when the majority report was approved by the full Committee, on party lines.

The minority report, signed by Capehart and Bricker, was released at the same time. Separate "individual views" by Fulbright and William Benton (D Conn.), both criticizing the minority report, also were filed.

In its report, the Democratic majority of the Committee concluded that the lending agency needed reorganization.

The minority concluded the agency should be abolished, and accused President Truman and Boyle of having "transferred Pendergast politics to the national level." They also declared that "morality in Government has declined to the lowest ebb in the nation's history."

Fulbright, in his "individual views", described the Republican report as "scurrilous" and "a political diatribe." He said it had no relevancy to the majority report approved by the Banking and Currency Committee or "to anything other than the next Presidential election."

The Republican report blamed President Truman and Boyle primarily for the evil which the Fulbright Subcommittee had disclosed in connection with RFC loans and suggested that the Democratic national chairman perhaps headed a vast "influence racket."

But the minority statement said the investigation had "failed to substantiate the charge" that Guy G. Gabrielson, chairman of the Republican National Committee, had influenced an $18 million RFC loan to the Carthage Hydrocol Company.

The two Republicans also lashed out at Donald S. Dawson, and said flatly that they did not accept his "protestations of innocence" that he never sought to influence the RFC in making loans.

"Even if we accepted Donald Dawson's explanations, we believe his ethical standards are indefensible. If he is sincere in the beliefs of right and wrong expressed before us, then he is incapable of honest duty as a public servant and should be summarily dismissed," they added.

Through some 35,000 words the minority report reviewed in detail the investigation and the findings of the Subcommittee as stated in four interim reports. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 646.)

Majority Conclusions

The majority statement did not discuss in detail the Subcommittee's charges of irregularities and influence peddling in the RFC. It did say, however, that its hearings "fully substantiated" the accusations and findings and that the RFC's former Board of Directors, superseded by the appointment of a single Administrator, "tacitly acknowledged" its responsiveness to outside, political pressure.

Repeatedly pointing out that the Subcommittee's study was directed at the operations of the RFC, not at whether the agency should be continued, the majority report made these specific recommendations:

As a condition precedent to the making of loans, the RFC should find that "a substantial public interest would be served."

RFC should determine that "financial assistance is not otherwise available on reasonable terms" before granting a loan.

No loans should be granted except on the reasonable expectation that they could be paid off with interest in 10 years, from earnings or other means, but not from liquidation of the borrower's business.

The Administrator should be required to pass on the reasonableness of all fees paid by the borrower, and to satisfy himself about "the propriety of all arrangements involving intermediaries."

RFC employees should be forbidden to accept jobs with borrowers from the RFC within two years after the borrower received an RFC loan.

Four Indicted

On Dec. 19 a federal Grand Jury indicted four persons figuring in the RFC probe. Charged with testifying falsely to the Senate Subcommittee which investigated RFC lending, they were:

E. Merl Young, former RFC examiner, Joseph H. Rosenbaum, a Washington lawyer interested in RFC lending who helped Young's wife get a mink coat; Young's brother, Herschel; and Robert W. Dudley, another Washington lawyer seeking an RFC loan. Dudley was brother-in-law of former Rep. Joseph Casey (D Mass.).

Boyle, Gabrielson And RFC

Summary — The Investigations Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Department in 1951 conducted an investigation into reports that the Chairmen of the Democratic and Republican National Committees used political pressure to influence Reconstruction Finance Corporation decisions on loans.

The charges first came up during the Fulbright Subcommittee investigation of influence in RFC loans. Sen. J. William Fulbright's (D Ark.) group turned the inquiry over to the Investigations Subcommittee, a group authorized to investigate any activity of the Executive Branch. (see page 507.)

Members of the Investigations Subcommittee were Clyde R. Hoey (D N.C.) Chairman; and John L. McClellan (D Ark.), Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), Thomas R. Underwood (D Ky.), Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis.), Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.) and Richard M. Nixon (R Calif.), members.

They opened hearings on the RFC cases Sept. 13 and closed the investigation Oct. 5. The Chairman of the Democratic National Committee, William M. Boyle, Jr., and the Chairman of the Republican National Committee, Guy G. Gabrielson, both denied that there had been anything improper in their relations with the RFC.

Officials and employees of the American Lithofold Corp., St. Louis printing firm which had hired Boyle and which had obtained RFC loans, testified, as did RFC officials.

Boyle resigned giving ill health as the reason shortly after the hearings closed. Gabrielson was asked to resign by several GOP Congressmen, but he said there was no reason for him to do so.

The Subcommittee worked on a final report for possible release at the end of 1951.

Hearings Begin

Hearings before the Subcommittee started Sept. 13. First witness was J. E. Toole, former treasurer of American Lithofold. Toole read from a diary that "RJB", whom he identified as R. J. Blauner, former president of the corporation, insisted Feb. 3, 1949, that Toole seek "high influence" at the White House to accelerate an RFC loan. Toole testified that he protested it would be "a mistake to try political pressure at this time."

Toole told the Subcommittee that he had been offered a position with Lithofold in 1944 which he took "almost immediately" after he had helped approve a $1,671,000 loan to Lithofold while he was chief loan analyst for the Small War Plants Corporation.

J. Frank Williams, the RFC examiner who approved $645,000 in RFC loans to the St. Louis firm in 1949, testified that he had not been pressured by Boyle to approve Lithofold's loan application. He said that Boyle, Max Siskind, Boyle's former law partner, and E. Merl Young, then an RFC loan expediter, never had talked to him about the loan. In fact, he said, he had never met Boyle.

Sen. McCarthy asked Williams why Lithofold's business with the government increased "by leaps and bounds" after it hired Boyle. Williams said that the RFC records showed "no fees paid" to anyone in connection with the loan. He testified that the company's loan applications had to be scrutinized carefully because expenses in salaries and commissions on sales for the Blauner family were "out of line," and because it sometimes had to defer payment to avert delinquency.

Toole testified Sept. 14 that Boyle made an appointment for three company officials to see Harley Hise, then chairman of the RFC, on Feb. 28, 1949, after Lithofold's third loan application had been turned down, and that a loan for $80,000 was approved by RFC three days later. Before the year ended, Lithofold had received a total of $565,000 in loans, he said. Toole said he did not know that Boyle was on the company's payroll at the time.

Remembers Calls

Hise testified Sept. 14 that Boyle called him from time to time to ask him to "meet with someone he would send over" but he could not recall that Boyle had ever interceded with him on behalf of Lithofold.

George B. Luce, chairman of the RFC review committee, told the Senate group Sept. 17 that the first loan to Lithofold was approved by RFC officials after the review committee recommended against loaning to the St. Louis printing firm. Although Luce said the procedure was unusual in the Lithofold case, several RFC officials who handled the case said that no pressure was put on them by Boyle to act favorably.

Frank Prince, a former RFC official and nephew of Rep. Frank W. Boykin (D Ala.), told the Subcommittee Sept. 17 that he had been fired by the RFC, and that he had accepted gifts in 1949 and 1950 from Blauner, including a ham, turkey, boxes of fruit, and a camera. He stated, however, that he had not been ousted because of accepting these gifts, but because of "false charges" made against him by Reuben Hartman, former head of the Mobile, Ala., Paper Mill Co.

William E. Willett, former RFC director, said Boyle called him three times after Boyle became a paid official of the Democratic National Committee, but that he never called on the Lithofold case. Although he was contacted more than a hundred times by the Committee, Willett testified Sept. 19, no pressure was ever put on him relative to any loan.

He said Boyle called Jan. 6, 1949, before he became a salaried official of the National Committee, to ask him to see officials of the Swift Engineering Co. They were brought to the office by Siskind, Willett said.

White House Queries

Willett also testified that he had received two calls from Matthew Connelly, Presidential secretary, about "a loan somewhere down south" and about a Key West, Fla., man who wanted a loan to buy a hotel. And he said he received a call from John R. Steelman, Presidential assistant, about a proposed Boston garage loan. He said he regarded the calls as in the nature of queries. The White House also inquired about any possible connection that Donald S. Dawson, Presidential assistant, or Boyle had had with the Lithofold case, he said.

Harvey J. Gunderson, former RFC director, testified Sept. 19 that he had never been contacted by the Democratic National Committee, but that Guy G. Gabrielson, Republican National Committee Chairman, had called him concerning a loan to Carthage Hydrocol Inc., of which Gabrielson was president and counsel. Gunderson said he had received the call from Gabrielson after the latter had taken over as Chairman, but he could not recall that they talked about anything but construction details.

Francis D. Flanagan, Subcommittee counsel, then said he had talked with RFC examiner James O. Hoover, who said Gabrielson called him in April or May, 1950, to ask for a modification of terms for a third Carthage Hydrocol loan, and that the changes were made along the line requested by Gabrielson.

Willett and Gunderson said they received more calls relative to RFC loans from Congress than from any other source.

E. Merl Young, who figured prominently in the Fulbright Subcommittee RFC investigation, testified Sept. 19. (see page 498.) He said Shirley Green, daughter of Cecil A. Green, Washington representative for Lithofold, had been a White House stenographer during the time that Lithofold received $565,000 in loans from RFC. Miss Green confirmed Young's statement, but denied that she had any connection with the loans.

Homer W. Stanhope, comptroller and assistant secretary of American Lithofold, told the Subcommittee Sept. 20 that Boyle received six checks for $250 each from Lithofold over a two-month period in 1949. He cashed five of the checks and endorsed a sixth, dated April 30, 1949, for deposit to the account of Siskind, his former law partner, according to Stanhope.

Siskind was still on the payroll of Lithofold, Stanhope said. He said Boyle and Siskind were listed by the company as salesmen, but the RFC in St. Louis "knew what Boyle and Siskind were actually getting paid for."

Boyle, who served as unpaid vice chairman of the Democratic National Committee from Feb. 8, 1949, until April 20, 1949, did not receive a check from Lithofold after April 30, 1949, to his knowledge, Stanhope stated. Boyle became a salaried vice chairman of the committee April 20, 1949, and became chairman in August, 1949.

Federal Employees

Stanhope and Carmine S. Bellino, a Subcommittee investigator, testified Sept. 20 that James P. Finnegan, former Collector of Internal Revenue at St. Louis, was paid $45,085 in salary and expenses by Lithofold while he was in his government post. Finnegan resigned as Collector April 4, 1951, and his activities were investigated by a St. Louis grand jury.

Bellino testified that three other government officials received pay from Lithofold while holding government posts. He said they were James B. E. Olson, who received $5,851 in 1949 - 50 while district head of the New York alcohol tax unit of Internal Revenue, a job he resigned Aug. 24; John L. Kelly, former chief of the New York-New Jersey wage and hour investigating unit of the Department of Labor, who received $13,942 in 1949-51; and Walter Doxon, an internal revenue agent at Newark, who got $1,000.

Lithofold also paid for airplane tickets to Florida for Elmer Brown, supervising agent of the Internal Revenue Office in Chicago, and Nagel Campbell, former collector in the same office, and their wives, Stanhope said. Marion O'Connor, an auditor in the Newark Internal Revenue office, for two weeks was a guest in Florida of Lithofold officials, he said.

R. J. Blauner, president of Lithofold, told the Subcommittee Sept. 21 that he hired Boyle as Lithofold's Washington attorney in 1949 because he expected "some things might develop." However, "nothing of any great moment" developed, he said.

He testified that Boyle was introduced to him by Green, his Washington representative, and that he hired Boyle to supplement Green's Washington work "on the legal side."

"Mr. Boyle", Blauner declared, "was never hired as a salesman for our company. Period."

Seldom Discussed RFC

Blauner said that the only conversation he had with Boyle regarding the RFC was when he, Green, and J. E. Toole went to Boyle's office Feb. 29, 1949, to ask him to arrange an appointment with Hise. Green proposed the meeting, he said.

Asked if he or Lithofold ever employed anyone for influence purposes, Blauner said, "We haven't done it. Some people may do it. But we haven't."

Sen. McCarthy asked Blauner how many men were put on the Lithofold payroll while connected with the Internal Revenue Bureau. Blauner named James B. E. Olson and James P. Finnegan. He said he hired them because "I thought they are good salesmen. That's the absolute truth."

He also was asked to whom his company gave cameras as "good will gestures." He recalled that Matthew J. Connelly, Presidential secretary, Boyle, Turney Gratz, former assistant to Boyle and Frank Prince, former RFC official, were among those who received such gifts. His company also gave perfume and hams as presents, he stated.

Green was a witness Sept. 21. Soon after he began his testimony several Senators agreed that Green was "in no condition to testify." In answer to a question by McCarthy about drinking, Green said that he had had one cocktail for lunch. The hearing was recessed and later his attorney said he was suffering from "a nerve condition."

Finnegan told the Subcommittee Sept. 21 that he had recommended Green for the job as Washington representative for Lithofold because "I thought he knew folks." Finnegan said he received $44,000 from Lithofold for "commercial" duties, and that he had nothing to do with the RFC loan or tax matters.

Gabrielson And RFC

Sen. John J. Williams (R Del.) said in a Senate speech Sept. 21 that Republican National Chairman Gabrielson was counsel for his (Gabrielson's) company before the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. He said Gabrielson was drawing a salary of $15,000 a year to represent the Carthage Hydrocol Company, and had at the same time talked with RFC Chairman W. Stuart Symington about getting more lenient terms on the $18,500,000 loans which Carthage had with the agency.

"He has been representing this company as counsel interceding in their behalf while at the same time holding the position of Chairman of the Republican National Committee," Williams said. "I do not think anyone who holds an official position in either major political party, whether as chairman or executive vice chairman, has any right to represent any firm or individual for a fee before a government agency."

Williams' speech was endorsed by Republican Sens. Everett M. Dirksen (Ill.), Homer Ferguson (Mich.), Andrew F. Schoeppel (Kan.), Harry P. Cain (Wash.), Francis Case (S.D.) and Ralph E. Flanders (Vt.).

"I do not know what the facts in the case may be, but I do know that we cannot point a finger of scorn and accusation at someone else without at the same time recognizing our own responsibility in that field," said Dirksen, Chairman of the Senate Republican Campaign Committee.

Gabrielson's Denial

In a letter to Chairman Hoey, Gabrielson Sept. 22 denied that any dealings he had with RFC were improper.

He asked the Subcommittee to hear him as soon as possible to clear up "rumors and innuendo." He said he sent a six-page letter to Republican leaders last March 27 detailing the facts about the loan to Carthage Hydrocol. He said all loans that the company had received were granted before he became National Chairman. "Neither influence nor pressure were used in obtaining the loans," he said and no influence was being used with the RFC in his negotiations with the agency to postpone repayments for one year.

"How absurd can blackguarding get?" he asked. "As the Chairman of a party out of power since 1933, I certainly had no voice in naming the RFC board or its present Administrator . . ."

Sen. Ferguson and Reps. Clare E. Hoffman (R Mich.) and John P. Saylor (R Pa.) called for his resignation however, on the ground that the GOP Chairman should not be vulnerable to the charge of "influence".

Olson Testifies

James B. E. Olson told the Subcommittee Sept. 24 that he went on Lithofold's payroll at $750 a month in February, 1949, and continued in their employ until June, 1951, as vice president of the firm. He said that he solicited printing orders for Lithofold by phone from two liquor dealers, and Lithofold got business from both. At the time he was district supervisor of the New York Alcohol tax unit.

He testified he split commissions on the sale of printing business with Joseph D. Nunan, Jr., former internal revenue commissioner who went on Lithofold's payroll after he resigned from the government in 1947.

Charles B. Moling, who was hired by Lithofold in March, 1951, as a $25,000 official in charge of sales in the East, testified Sept. 24. He said he received $6,100 in personal loans from Lithofold and $6,000 from Laurel Printing Company of New York while he was a $6,200 - a - year civilian employee of the Air Force. The loans were made in 1949 and 1950, he said.

He testified that he had been asked by Lithofold for aid in obtaining paper, but had never been asked to change specifications for the company. He went to work for Lithofold after leaving federal employment, and said he received numerous gifts from R. A. Blauner, former vice president of Lithofold, whom he characterized as probably his best friend.

Walter Doxon, Internal Revenue agent, and John L. Kelly, former regional director of a wages and hours investigating unit of the Labor Department, testified Sept. 25 that they split $7,000 in commissions from Lithofold while on the federal payroll.

Siskind Testifies

Max Siskind outlined to the Subcommittee Sept. 26 how he bought Boyle's law practice for $150,000. It was customary for the two to do business "without so much as a scrap of paper between us," he testified, and therefore not unusual that they should have handled the sale of Boyle's law practice the same way.

Siskind protested but finally agreed to submit to the Subcommitee a list of the 23 cases which he had bought from Boyle. He said the listing would ruin his law practice and subject his clients "to being hounded."

The list did not include Lithofold. Siskind said that he did not know that Boyle represented Lithofold until Green called him in May, 1949, to ask him to succeed Boyle as the company's Washington attorney. He called Lithofold "a big - money-for-nothing" client, and said that he had only handled two minor matters for the company. He, like Boyle, testified that he had never had any part to play in RFC loan negotiations for the company, and he had never solicited government contracts for the printing firm.

Both Boyle and Siskind agreed to submit their income tax figures for the previous two years.

BOYLE'S TESTIMONY

Boyle testified Sept. 27. He said he did not exert influence on the RFC for a loan to American Lithofold.

Boyle told the Subcommittee that he made an appointment for three Lithofold officials to talk to Harley Hise, then chairman of the RFC, on Feb. 28, 1949. Boyle insisted that he did not know Lithofold was seeking an RFC loan, but "probably assumed" such negotiations were involved. At the time he was receiving a monthly retainer of $500 from Lithofold "for general legal services," he said.

"I had nothing to do with the application. I had nothing to do with the presentation of the case. I never discussed the loan with anyone in the RFC," he declared.

He was serving as non-salaried Democratic vice chairman and acting chairman during the time he accepted Lithofold as a client, Boyle said. He told the Subcommittee that he accepted eight law cases — not including Lithofold — involving government agencies, while serving in this capacity. However, he discontinued his law practice when he became the salaried executive vice chairman of the Committee April 20, 1949, he said. Then he sold his law practice to Siskind for $150,000, he added.

Sen. Richard M. Nixon (R Calif.) said seven of the eight cases accepted by Boyle during this period were handled "successfully from the standpoint of the client. Including Lithofold this makes eight out of nine handled successfully," Nixon commented. Two cases besides Lithofold involved RFC loans.

Boyle said that his action was "perfectly proper. I never asked a favor from a government agency in my life." He said he never used his political power for personal gain.

Under questioning by Sen. John L. McClellan (D Ark.), Boyle testified that he had not recommended to Lithofold that it retain Siskind as its counsel. He said that Cecil A. Green had suggested Siskind become the firm's Washington attorney.

Probe Sale of Practice

Boyle was questioned about the sale of his law practice to Siskind. McClellan told Boyle the arrangement "gives rise" to the belief in the minds of some that it was an arrangement for "Siskind to do the work and Boyle as the National Chairman to get $150,000."

Boyle answered that the $100,000 which he had received from Siskind was for installment payments as part of the sales agreement, not legal fees. "I never sent clients" to Siskind, after going on the Party's payroll, Boyle said, and he and Siskind did not split fees after that time.

Theodore Link, reporter for the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, told the Subcommittee Sept 28 that two "very reliable" sources, whom he declined to name, told him that Boyle received $8,000 from Lithofold while he was an official of the National Committee. Boyle testified that he received only $1,250 from Lithofold, and had so informed Link. Link testified that Boyle "was vague" and "told me he didn't remember what he got."

In a development related to earlier testimony in the investigation, 12 GOP House members Oct. 3 demanded that Gabrielson resign. Signing the statement were: John J. Allen, Jr.

Hired RFC Man

Boyle had Turney Gratz "on his payroll" in 1949 while Gratz was a $10,330 - a - year employee of the RFC, Nixon told the Subcommittee Oct. 3.

Gratz immediately asked the Subcommittee for an opportunity to explain his work for Boyle. He told the press that Boyle paid him for "personal accounting service" which he handled in his spare time and "had nothing to do with the RFC or Bill Boyle's political affairs." He said that he kept track of Boyle's investments for him from 1946 until 1950.

Janet Boone, former stenographer for Lithofold, testified Oct. 3 that her immediate superiors ordered her to keep the statements made out for Boyle face down on her desk so that they could not be seen by others. "They told me Mr. Boyle was the Democratic chairman," she testified. "I asked if he was a salesman. They gave me no answer."

She said she thought that she was mistaken in telling Link, the St. Louis Post - Dispatch reporter, that Boyle and Siskind were paid in a joint account. Carmine S. Bellino of the Subcommittee staff testified that the firm's bookkeeping methods indicated that Lithofold believed "it was one and the same account." Miss Boone was with Lithofold until July 1, 1950, and she said that she was never advised that Boyle was "off the payroll."

GABRIELSON TESTIFIES

Chairman Gabrielson of the GOP National Committee testified before the Subcommittee Oct. 4 that he tried to get Harvey J. Gunderson, former Reconstruction Finance Corporation Director, appointed president of the New York Stock Exchange in 1950.

Gabrielson identified a memorandum from Allen K. Brehm, treasurer of Carthage Hydrocol, Inc., dated Oct. 11, 1950, proposing Gunderson as successor to Emil Schram as Exchange president.

At that time Gunderson, a Republican, knew that he would not be reappointed as an RFC director, Gabrielson said. Gabrielson told the Senate Investigating Subcommittee that he was "glad to help" Gunderson, but that he was "unable to do very much." Gunderson did not get the job.

Sen. Nixon told Gabrielson that his recommendation of Gunderson "certainly creates a bad impression" and implied "an act of impropriety."

Under questioning, Gabrielson testified that he had contacted Gunderson about 15 times concerning loans after becoming GOP National Chairman, and that he had talked once with Hise, former RFC chairman, and several other RFC officials. The loans all were granted before Gabrielson became National Chairman. Most of the conversations dealt with "working capital," he said. He said that he had talked with Secretary of Interior Oscar Chapman about his company's operations.

Turney Gratz testified before the Investigating Subcommittee Oct. 5 that he received $11,000.95 from Boyle for keeping Boyle's personal books and records and keeping track of his investments.

Hearings before the Subcommittee closed and staff members started work on a final report.

Boyle Resigns

Boyle announced Oct. 13 that he had resigned as chairman of the Democratic National Committee. Next day he entered Georgetown University Hospital for a checkup.

In his letter of resignation to the President, Boyle said: "This Committee has now made a thorough inquiry, including a most thorough examination of all my books and records, which I was glad to make available to it. A Republican member of the Committee stated yesterday that the records contain 'no evidence of illegality or moral turpitude' on my part. I should add to that that I have at all times conducted myself with honor and propriety."

Boyle said poor health forced him to give up the national chairmanship before the heavy work of the 1952 campaign began.

Gabrielson, Republican Chairman, said in Denver Oct. 13 that he felt fine and had no intention of resigning.

Capitol Pressure?

While work on the final report continued, the Subcommittee started a "preliminary" inquiry into reports that two Capitol employees had pressured the RFC in connection with loans.

The Hoey probers studied reports that Mrs. Flo Bratten, secretary to Vice President Barkley for 25 years, and Charles E. Shaver, counsel for the Senate Small Business Committee, asked the RFC in 1950 to approve a $1.1 million loan to finance construction of a proposed Chalfonte Hotel at Miami Beach, Fla., and a $325,000 loan to the Mercury Record Company of Chicago.

The investigation came about as Sen. Edward J. Thye (R Minn.) made public a telegram to Chairman John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) demanding suspension of Shaver from the Senate Small Business Committee staff. Sparkman asked Hoey to investigate, and said he was "deeply shocked" about the reports.

Shaver said Oct. 22 that he and Mrs. Bratten urged the RFC to grant the two loans. Both were approved, but the hotel loan was never made because its backers rejected the terms as being too stiff.

He had "no apologies to make" for his actions, Shaver said. He sought the hotel loan approval at the request of "an old friend," Sam Fleisher, president of the Fleisher Engineering and Construction Company of Minneapolis. Vice President Barkley and Mrs. Bratten also said they were "old friends" of Fleisher.

Meanwhile, Barkley said Oct. 22 if his secretary interceded in behalf of a government loan applicant she acted contrary to his "specific instructions." He later queried Mrs. Bratten, then announced he would withhold judgment pending outcome of the investigation.

Speaking to newsmen Oct. 23, Mrs. Bratten said she had talked to RFC officials "hundreds of times" but never tried to influence the hotel loan. She merely inquired about its status, she said. She declared she never had accepted fees and to her knowledge had done nothing "wrong."

Shaver Oct. 24 submitted his resignation because criticism of his conduct "has impaired my usefulness to the Committee."

Sen. Hoey said Nov. 28 the preliminary study had been finished and that in January, 1952, he would ask the Subcommittee to decide whether to hold public hearings.

Probe of Tax Collection Scandals

Summary — A long investigation into reported irregularities in collection of taxes and in prosecution of tax fraud cases uncovered highly publicized scandals and led to the resignation or ouster of scores of federal employees.

The hearings were scheduled to continue into 1952.

The Subcommittee on Administration of the Internal Revenue Laws of the House Committee on Ways and Means conducted the investigation. On the Subcommittee were Cecil R. King (D Calif.), chairman, Thomas J. O'Brien (D Ill.), J. M. Combs (D Tex.), Eugene J. Keogh (D N.Y.), Robert W. Kean (R N.J.), Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.) and John W. Byrnes (R Wis.).

Spade work for the probe was started after the House approved the study Feb. 2, 1951. The hearings started March 19 and continued at frequent intervals into December.

The Subcommittee questioned officials from the Bureau of Internal Revenue and Department of Justice and many persons who had been in tax difficulties.

During the investigation, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue retired, the Assistant Attorney General in charge of tax fraud prosecution resigned by request; the chief counsel of the Internal Revenue Bureau resigned with a sharp criticism of the Subcommittee, and several Collectors resigned or were fired.

Highlight of the hearings came when a Chicago lawyer testified that two men had tried to shake him down for $500,000 on the threat that they could have him jailed for his tax debt. The two men, he said, claimed to be associated with several high government officials. The two men, and the officials named, called the story a lie.

Background — When investigating an error in his own tax return in 1947, Sen. John Williams (R Del.) found that a cashier in the Collector's office had been tampering with the accounts. Williams told the Senate the Internal Revenue Bureau did not seem sufficiently alert, and he started a long personal investigation into the operation of the Bureau, punctuated by frequent Senate speeches on the subject.

In 1950 the Senate Crime Investigating Committee heard testimony in California charging Internal Revenue officials there with many irregularities. Also in 1950 the St. Louis, Mo., Collector was publicly criticized and finally indicted for accepting bribes. (For Crime Committee investigation in 1950, see CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 437.)

These and other reports convinced the tax - writing House Ways and Means Committee that a general investigation of the Internal Revenue Bureau was needed. (The study was later expanded to include the Justice Department.)

Ways and Means Chairman Robert L. Doughton (D N.C.) introduced a resolution (H Res 78) Jan. 19, 1951, calling for the investigation. The House approved the resolution on voice vote Feb. 2. Chairman King of the Internal Revenue Subcommittee introduced a resolution (H Res 153) March 6 to allot $50,000 for the probe. The House approved this bill on voice vote March 14.

HEARINGS

BIR Men Quizzed

The King Subcommittee started hearings March 19. For the first few months, all sessions were closed to the public.

First witness was George J. Schoeneman, Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The Subcommittee asked him what the Bureau had done to collect taxes from 126 "allegedly prominent underworld figures," named by the Subcommittee. The list was made public.

Schoeneman defended the Bureau's tax enforcement policies, contending that for the previous four years tax fraud investigations of gamblers, racketeers and other criminals amounted to over 10 per cent of all the Bureau's tax fraud investigations. Given more tax collectors, Schoeneman contended, the Bureau could bring in from $1 billion to $1.5 billion in additional taxes each year. And, he remarked, "I think that's conservative."

The Subcommittee began June 28 to study the suspension of Denis W. Delaney as collector of internal revenue for Massachusetts.

Chairman King said that "initial information presented to the Subcommittee suggests that the Boston investigation involves not only Collector Delaney but also persons outside the government who have had dealings with Mr. Delaney on tax cases."

President Truman suspended Delaney June 27 "pending the investigation of certain charges concerning the manner in which Mr. Delaney has conducted the business of his office."

Meanwhile, Schoeneman, Commissioner of Internal Revenue since 1947, offered his resignation to the President June 27, to become effective July 31. Schoeneman, 62, gave ill health as his reason.

American Lithofold

King said Aug. 28 his group was "looking closely" into the possible connection between a resigned Alcohol Tax Unit supervisor in New York and the American Lithofold Corporation of St. Louis.

He refused to name any of the persons interviewed by the Subcommittee during closed hearings, but identified the Alcohol Tax Unit supervisor as James B. E. Olson. "The Committee has learned that Mr. Olson was an officer of, and received fees from, this company (American Lithofold) during his tenure in office as alcohol tax supervisor," King declared. (For other investigations involving American Lithofold, see page 508.)

The Subcommittee heard testimony Aug. 30 from Maurice Smith, New York City accountant. After his statement, Smith was arrested by federal agents and charged with filing a false affidavit with the Internal Revenue Bureau. Chairman King said Smith had been an accountant for a group that was alleged to have tried to skip payment of $25,000 in taxes.

In New York, James B. E. Olson, former district head of the New York Federal Alcohol Tax Unit, testified before the Subcommittee Sept. 11 that he had received a salary of $5,900 as a vice president of American Lithofold while he held his $9,400 government post. He resigned Aug. 24 from the government job.

In an open hearing, Olson said that James P. Finnegan, former internal revenue collector in St. Louis, guided him into a "business proposition" in which he solicited contracts for the St. Louis printing firm. He told about soliciting accounts for the St. Louis printing firm from Rupert Brewery and the Austin-Nichols Company. Vonne V. Circele, sales representative of Lithofold, also testified that Olson turned over to Lithofold names of liquor firms for solicitation.

Practice Called "Shakedown"

"Didn't you realize that such a practice was something of a shakedown — that a firm doing business with your office might feel obligated to buy printing from the company you represented?" Rep. Curtis asked Olson.

Olson replied that liquor companies "weren't my accounts." He said any business other than his solicitation to the above-mentioned firms on behalf of Lithofold must have been negotiated by Joseph D. Nunan, Jr., former commissioner of Internal Revenue, who was associated with Lithofold in 1949.

Olson said that he had sought a television distributorship from Louis I. Pokrass who was also head of the Gotham Liquor Company. James Wright, an assistant in the New York alcohol tax unit while Olson headed it, testified Sept 11 that Olson held up cancellation of a liquor license for the firm. Olson said that he delayed the cancellation on order from Washington.

While he was employed in the office of the Collector of Internal Revenue in Brooklyn between 1934 and 1945, Olson said he was offered a $25,000-a-year public relations job by Joseph Applebaum, an official of the Conandagua Wine Company, and that he accepted the post. He said "my presence alone was helpful" to concerns employing him although he did not work full-time for them.

Dunlap Testifies

Back in Washington Oct. 3, the Subcommittee opened a new series of hearings.

The first witness, newly appointed Commissioner of Internal Revenue John B. Dunlap who replaced Schoeneman, revealed that he had ordered an examination of the income tax returns for 1948, 1949, and 1950 of all officials and front-line enforcement officers of the Bureau. The order, he said, would require examination of returns regardless of "whether or not the information on the return indicates that an examination is warranted."

Dunlap discussed with the Subcommittee the practicality of forcing Bureau employees also to answer questionnaires on their net worth and financial holdings. Such a form was required of all new employees of the Bureau, and King disclosed at the outset of the hearing that his group had recommended to Secretary of the Treasury John W. Snyder that the net worth questionnaire be circulated again. Snyder, said King, first supported the idea, then opposed it.

Dunlap held that examination of the income tax returns would be "far more effective" in determining the financial standings of the Bureau employees, inasmuch as, should corruption be uncovered, it would be far simpler to proceed against offenders. Still further, he contended, it would be psychologically a bad time to use the questionnaire, since it would drive badly needed employees away from the Bureau.

King said that Dunlap had indicated no opposition to the questionnaire when it originally was proposed. Dunlap said that if the Subcommittee directed circulation of the form, he would cooperate.

As for the Bureau's current scandals, Dunlap laid the blame on a shortage of supervisory personnel and a lack of funds. Most of the difficulties, he said, were primarily the result of outside business activities of the Collectors, who held office under political and not civil service appointment.

Fees Paid Finnegan

The Subcommitee then put on the stand James P. Finnegan, the former St. Louis Collector. Finnegan, who continued his law practice during his seven years in office, said he had received $2,250 in legal fees from an individual delinquent in his federal income taxes. The man was Sam Abramovitz, whom Finnegan said he had represented even before becoming Collector. He said that most of the checks were made out by the Karol Kell Garment Company, Inc., a firm which also was in serious tax difficulties and in which Abramovitz had an interest.

Finnegan, frequently unable to remember his activities as Collector, said he had not represented Karol Kell in a legal capacity. He said the firm had made out checks to him because it owed Abramovitz money, and Abramovitz owed him for counseling services in connection with real estate matters.

Henry Rathert, an Internal Revenue Agent in St. Louis, testified however, that it was Abramovitz who owed the firm money. He also said that neither Abramovitz nor Karol Kell had paid all their back taxes.

Finnegan returned to the stand Oct. 4 to deny testimony by Rudolph H. Hartmann, senior special intelligence agent of the Bureau, that the Dudmar Agency solicited firms in tax difficulties or under investigation by Finnegan's office, and that Finnegan personally received $6,193.11 from the Agency. Finnegan asserted he was "never in the insurance business in my life." The Dudmar Agency was headed by John Martin Brodsky.

The Subcommittee Oct. 5 quizzed Brodsky. He said he paid Collector Finnegan $6,193.11 in 1949 and 1950, but said the money was for legal services.

Brodsky denied allegations by earlier witnesses that Finnegan supplied him with names of firms in tax difficulties as potential customers for insurance policies, and in return received "cuts" from the premium.

Check for Perjury

Following Brodsky's testimony, the Subcommittee announced it had turned over to the Justice Department for "possible prosecution for perjury" a transcript of the conflicting testimony.

Further testimony was heard from Hugh Finnegan, brother of James, who said that he and James received money from Estate Research Bureau, a New York insurance firm, shortly after it sold insurance to Maxwell Shapiro, head of the Maxwell Shapiro Woolen Co., Boston. Shapiro was then involved in tax difficulties.

Hugh Finnegan said he was with Daniel Friedman, a partner in Estate Research Bureau, who also had an interest in his (Hugh's) firm, Hydroplane Corp., when the insurance deal was arranged, and that Denis W. Delaney, former Collector in Boston provided them with the introduction. Delaney was under federal indictment, one count of which was the charge that he accepted $2,500 from Friedman to sway his decisions on the collection of Shapiro's income taxes.

Hugh Finnegan also said that his brother had arranged for Friedman and himself to see Collector Francis R. Smith in Philadelphia and that insurance had been discussed, but that Smith refused to have any dealings with them.

Brought to the witness stand again Oct. 9, James Finnegan said that after he took the job of Collector in 1944, the dollar volume of his law practice, which he maintained on the side, more than doubled, though he worked at it no more than three or four hours a day. But, he testified, the "mental and physical strain" of trying to be a lawyer and Collector simultaneously became too great and he informed the White House twice in 1949 and once as late as October, 1950, that he would like to resign.

He said President Truman, himself, asked him in October, 1950, to stay on because he was not in a position "to replace me at the time." President Truman said at his Oct. 11 press conference that he did not recall making such an appeal.

Finnegan contended that the money — about $2,000, he said, — which he received from the Estate Research Bureau was for legal services to the Hydroplane Corp., and had no connection with the sale of an insurance policy to Shapiro. Smith, the Philadelphia Collector, who also testified, said he had seen Friedman and Hugh Finnegan twice, once at the request of James, but he told them he was not interested in any business deal with them.

Secretary of the Treasury Snyder, the only witness Oct. 10, told the Subcommittee he repeatedly asked Finnegan to resign, from August, 1950, until the time he did resign in April. He said he had informed President Truman of his requests but did not recall just when this was.

Snyder Cites Rumors

Snyder said he and the then Commissioner of Internal Revenue George Schoeneman decided that Finnegan should be asked to quit because of "rumors of a persistent nature" about him. At that time, he said, an investigation of Finnegan by the Bureau's Special Intelligence Unit was underway.

Snyder also told the Subcommittee that the "net worth" questionnaire, which had become a subject of controversy between the Subcommittee and the Treasury Department, would be circulated at once among the Bureau's upper-salaried personnel. It called for statements of net worth, financial transactions and sources of income.

Turning Oct. 16 to Bureau affairs in Boston, where Collector Delaney was indicted by a federal grand jury for bribery, the Subcommittee heard testimony linking Delaney's activities with those of James Finnegan. Finnegan was indicted Oct. 11 by a St. Louis grand jury, also on charges of bribery.

Jerome Friedman, a special agent with the Bureau's income tax unit in New York, testified that in mid-1949 a total of $10,000 was paid to Delaney and $2,000 to Finnegan by the Estate Research Bureau, a New York insurance concern. The investigator said a payment of $2,500 was made to Delaney "within a few days" after Estate Research received $15,000 in fees from two Boston businessmen who were trying to settle their tax difficulties. Finnegan's payments also were begun shortly after that, Friedman testified. He said the same concern turned over $1,250 to Hugh Finnegan in the same year.

Wanted Tax "Shaved"

Maxwell Shapiro testified that in mid-1949 he paid $10,000 to Daniel Friedman after Friedman had said he could "shave down" Shapiro's outstanding tax liabilities of $142,000 to about $40,000. Shapiro, who said Friedman had come to his office with his tax proposal in the company of Hugh Finnegan, testified further that he consulted Delaney about the proposed deal and was assured it was "okay."

Despite the arrangement, Shapiro told the Subcommittee, he was never released of any tax obligations and "all that happened to me was that I was fleeced." Delaney, however, did not press for tax collections and the obligations were still outstanding, he said.

Shapiro was followed on the witness stand by Louis Hellman, president of the Acorn Clothing Company of Boston, who testified that he talked to Friedman, on the recommendation of Shapiro, and sought his help in settling tax liabilities amounting to $75,000. Friedman than asked for a $5,000 retainer fee, which Hellman said he paid. An arrangement was worked out with Delaney, through Friedman, the witness testified, for paying the back taxes on a quarterly installment plan. But later, Hellman said, he paid his full tax indebtedness in a lump sum.

On Oct. 18, James Donovan, a Lawrence, Mass., attorney, told the Subcommittee that in 1946 he obtained Delaney's help in negotiating with the government for a federal building sought by the Raytheon Company.

Donovan said Delaney came to Washington with him "to tell people who and what I was" and to make "a few social introductions." For this, he said he paid Delaney $1,000. Later in 1946, Donovan said Delaney again came to Washington with him for "the same thing" in connection with a license application by Radio Station WLAW of Lawrence, Mass. Among those he said Delaney introduced him to at the White House were Matthew J. Connelly, a Presidential secretary, and Schoeneman, then a White House assistant. He said Delany received $2,000 from the radio station for this matter.

Sums Not Reported?

Dominic A. Ieradi, special agent in Boston with the Bureau's Special Intelligence Unit, testified that Delaney reported neither the $1,000 check from Donovan nor the $2,000 check from the radio station on his 1946 income tax returns. Delaney said he reported the amounts in 1948 as part of gross receipts of his construction firm, Ieradi said.

Daniel Friedman, who was questioned next, refused to answer on the grounds of possible self-incrimination. He declined to say whether he knew Delaney or Finnegan, if he had ever sold life insurance to the President of American Lithofold Corporation, if he knew Shapiro or Hellman, or if he had discussed with anyone, other than his attorney, the matter of refusing to talk to the Subcommittee.

In another phase of the widening probe, Commissioner Dunlap Oct. 23 told the Subcommittee the government had obtained waivers from a Kansas City coin machine distributor which would permit his prosecution for an alleged $675,000 tax fraud despite the statute of limitations.

Denied Case "Gathered Dust"

Appearing at his own request, he denied that the case — involving Ardeis H. Myers, Kansas City investment broker—had been allowed to "gather dust."

President Truman Oct. 23 suspended another Internal Revenue Bureau official—Lipe Henslee, Collector at Nashville, Tenn. — pending further investigation into the state of the Collector's health.

In making the announcement, Commissioner Dunlap said the suspension was based "purely on a question of health."

The Subcommittee heard a suspended Brooklyn internal revenue collector testify Oct. 25 that he didn't know exactly why he was asked to resign.

The witness, Joseph P. Marcelle said Commissioner Dunlap, in requesting the resignation Oct. 23, told him the request was based on "personal activities outside of the office." Marcelle was subpenaed by the Subcommittee after he failed to show up at a scheduled hearing Oct. 24. He explained that he had been ill and was "terribly sorry."

The witness told investigators of his sideline activities, including a total earning of $42,030 in private law practice between 1944 and 1949, but challenged a report in his personnel file which stated that he had agreed to give up his law practice when he got the internal revenue job. He also told of collecting $120,000 in 1948 from his connections with a vending machine company.

After the witness first had testified that the investigation was "a joke to me," Adrian W. DeWind, Subcommittee counsel, pressed him to say whether he didn't speak to a number of persons seeking to get the investigation stopped. Marcelle replied that he "may have" mentioned it in February to Schoeneman, but that he did not recall any of the details.

Marcelle admitted he had been "very careless" about personal tax affairs but maintained he had run his tax office "meticulously."

Underestimated Income?

Dunlap told the Subcommittee Oct. 25 that Marcelle understated his income by $11,419 in 1948 and claimed unsubstantiated deductions of $23,097 from 1945 through 1949 The Commissioner said that in the case of a "private citizen" this probably would not receive criminal prosecution but on the part of an employee "would be considered very serious."

Orders had gone out, he said to audit the returns of key personnel for the previous three years and every year in the future.

The Internal Revenue Bureau announced Oct. 24 that it had suspended two more of its employees in the New York area — Theodore Isaacs, an agent in the upper New York City division, and Elias Schulman, a deputy collector in the first New York district (Marcelle's) in Brooklyn.

Commissioner Dunlap said Isaacs was suspended "pending completion of investigation of his testimony before special agents of the Bureau regarding his financial condition and other matters." Schulman was suspended "pending investigation of charges of misconduct," he said.

Plan Wider Probe

On Oct. 31, Rep. King announced that an expanded inquiry would be launched by his group. He said they intended to find out why "a very high percentage" of tax fraud cases, recommended for prosecution by special agents, had been "dropped at higher levels."

King said that some of the grounds for non - prosecution "appear to be of doubtful validity and the committee will develop this aspect thoroughly."

Tax fraud cases ordinarily were reviewed first by the regional counsel, then passed on to the chief counsel and the Assistant Commissioners of the Bureau who in turn sent them to the Department of Justice. Prosecution could be stopped at any point.

Six Areas Of Investigation

Mapping out a program that would carry into 1952, King listed six areas for inquiry:

1. Procedures for settling civil tax liabilities.

2. Administration of the Bureau's Alcohol Tax Unit.

3. Supervision of standards of conduct of tax lawyers and others who practiced before the Treasury Department.

4. Methods of supervision by the Bureau of Internal Revenue of its own employees.

5. Reorganization of Washington, D.C., and field units to eliminate duplication of work, inefficient procedures, etc.

6. Methods followed in handling tax fraud cases.

Another name was added to the resignation list Oct. 31 when Tennessee's Collector of Internal Revenue Lipe Henslee resigned because of poor health.

Legislation bringing tax collectors under Civil Service was recommended Nov. 1 by the new Democratic National Chairman Frank E. McKinney, and was endorsed by President Truman the same day. Sen. Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) announced Oct. 27 that he intended to introduce such a bill in 1952. His proposal also would bar tax revenue collectors from outside activities. Kefauver said he was "delighted" with the President's support; Rep. King was "gratified."

Aims at "Unfaithful Few"

Appearing before the group in closed session Nov. 2 were Secretary of the Treasury Snyder and Commissioner Dunlap.

Although details of the meeting were not disclosed, Rep. King announced that the Subcommittee wanted to talk to Dunlap about a speech he made before the National Press Club Oct. 27.

In his speech, Dunlap suggested that disclosures of corruption might imperil tax collections.

Snyder, in an Oct. 27 speech in New York, said that "every resource" was being used to eliminate the "unfaithful few" responsible for the scandals threatening the Department's Internal Revenue Bureau.

Meanwhile the group continued hearings and heard Assistant Attorney General Caudle, chief of the Justice Department's tax division, testify Nov. 1 behind closed doors. Caudle disclosed the previous day that he had made a trip to Italy in 1950 to help two wine merchants straighten out their financial affairs. He said he was on 30-day leave from the government at the time and added he was "just a friendly consultant."

Discuss Oil Deal

Caudle was questioned about his personal and business associations and about his income tax returns. He told the group he recently withdrew from an oil development project in Oklahoma because his name was being used to promote the venture. He added that he protested about such promotion to Jess Larson, head of the General Services Administration, who was also in on the venture.

Larson said Nov. 2 that he and Caudle had been associated in the oil project and had both lost some money but denied that he had done "anything illegal or which reflects on my ability to carry out my official duties."

The House group Nov. 6 began checking four possible tax fraud cases, involving almost $4 million in unpaid taxes, in North Carolina. Object of the check was to determine whether there had been any irregularities in the handling of the cases, either by the Internal Revenue Bureau or by the tax division of the Department of Justice. Special agents for the Bureau had recommended that the delinquent taxpayers be prosecuted for criminal fraud but actual prosecutions had not taken place.

J. Howard Friddle, U.S. treasury agent from Charlotte, N.C., provided the Subcommittee with testimony behind closed doors Nov. 6.

The first arrest of an Internal Revenue Bureau employee on the basis of information obtained in questionnaires distributed to bureau agents as a result of the Congressional inquiry came Nov. 2.

The agent, Jacob Friedman, of Hartsdale, N.Y., was charged with filing a false, and fraudulent statement regarding his income and net worth.

Two employees of the San Francisco office of the Internal Revenue Bureau were dismissed Nov. 5. Dorothy C. Frisbie and Edwin M. Furtado were "removed from service" by Commissioner Dunlap. They had been suspended Oct. 27 along with Collector James G. Smyth and six other employees.

Seek Files Access

The House investigators announced Nov. 8 they had been unable to gain access to the Justice Department's tax fraud files for use in their probe. Subcommittee Counsel DeWind said that requests for certain files, submitted several weeks previously had not been filled.

John W. Byrnes (R Wis.), member of the Subcommittee, said Nov. 9 that the Justice Department had said neither "yes" nor "no" to requests for tax fraud files. "I think the only thing we can do is take the case directly to the President," Byrnes added.

Chairman King said he would consider a plea to the President.

DeWind said Nov. 13 that King had decided "after considering the delay from every aspect", to ask Mr. Truman to intervene. DeWind said the Subcommittee wanted to look at 12 or 15 cases of tax frauds where the Justice Department had not prosecuted. DeWind said the Justice Department had reported that day that the request for the files was still under consideration.

King called Mr. Truman by telephone Nov. 14. The President was vacationing at Key West, Fla.

The Chairman announced after the call that the President had given "a blank check for anything we want." King said he had been promised "all we need in the way of files and other cooperation."

Wants Justice Done

But in a Key West press conference Nov. 15, Mr. Truman said he had not promised any action on the files. He said he had asked King to send a memorandum outling the problem and added that he would not act until he had studied the memorandum.

The President said he wanted to do everything to see that justice was done.

The President's press secretary announced Nov. 16 that tax prosecutor Caudle had been asked to quit because "he had engaged in oustside activities which the President feels are incompatible with the duties of his office."

"As far as the President knows," Short added, "Caudle has done nothing illegal."

"My heart is broken," Caudle told newsmen after his ouster had been announced. "I don't know what else I can say except I have been a loyal servant out to make a great reputation for my administration."

Bolich Resigns

Daniel A. Bolich, member of the Internal Revenue Bureau's Management Committee, was resigning because of ill health, Commissioner Dunlap announced Nov. 19.

Bolich had been Assistant Commissioner until Sept. 21 when he was relieved for reasons of health. He then was appointed to the Bureau's policy-making Management Committee.

Bolich had been investigated by the King Subcommittee but his resignation had not been asked, according to a Subcommittee spokesman.

King Investigated

The Subcommittee held three closed sessions to investigate "rumors" that Chairman King had intervened to prevent action in California tax fraud cases. King announced the "rumors" himself.

The group heard testimony Nov. 19 from John M. Wyman, chief supervisor for the Home Loan Bank Board, and Philip Angel, associate counsel for the Home Loan Bank of San Francisco. On Nov. 20, the Committee questioned other Los Angeles and Southern California officials.

Rep. Combs acted as chairman after King disqualified himself.

Witnesses said after the hearings that King had been reported to be a backer of T. A. Gregory, president of the Federal Savings and Loan Association of Long Beach Calif., whose income tax returns had been examined by Internal Revenue. Gregory's organization was said to be in a dispute with the Home Loan Bank of San Francisco.

After a Subcommittee discussion behind closed doors Nov. 21, Acting Chairman Combs said the group had cleared King. He released a statement saying:

"The Subcommittee has unanimously concluded that the rumors concerning actual or attempted intervention by Rep. King in these matters are completely without foundation.

"Not one scrap of evidence and, in fact, not even a single allegation, has been presented to the Subcommittee in the course of these hearings that Rep. King, or persons purporting to act for him, has participated in or been connected with the disposition of these cases."

Caudle Testifies

Public hearings were resumed Nov. 26 after Attorney General McGrath said Nov. 25 that the Subcommittee would have the "complete cooperation" of the Justice Department.

Opening witness was Theron Lamar Caudle, who was asked about his relationship with Keith M. Beaty, Charlotte, N.C., taxi fleet owner.

Caudle said Beaty was an old friend. When he heard that Beaty was in difficulty over taxes, Caudle said, he advised him to cooperate with Internal Revenue and then disqualified himself from any part in tax actions against Beaty. Caudle said Beaty helped him buy two automobiles at discounts and once loaned him a car for four or five months. He said he still owned Beaty $285 on a car, but that Beaty wouldn't accept payment.

Beaty's tax troubles, Caudle said, stemmed from animosity stirred up in Charlotte when he (Caudle) had investigated rackets that were "being allowed to run there."

The Subcommittee recessed early Nov. 26 to study Justice Department files on Caudle just released to the group.

Plane Trips, Fur Coats

Caudle appeared again Nov. 27 and told about another North Carolina friend who had been in tax trouble. The friend was Troy Whitehead, Charlotte manufacturer. According to Caudle, Whitehead had twice flown him (Caudle) and a party of government officials to Florida in Whitehead's private plane for deep sea fishing.

Whitehead later called him about federal tax liens put on the Charlotte plant, Caudle said. Caudle said that he then "might have" called Charles Oliphant, counsel to the Bureau of Internal Revenue, "to see what he could do to have the liens removed or keep them from being imposed."

The liens then were removed, Committee Counsel DeWind said.

Caudle again testified Nov. 28. He said that his wife and the wives of Sen. John L. McClellan (D Ark.) and Kenneth C. Royall, former Secretary of the Army, bought fur coats cheaply through Jacob Landau, a New York tax attorney.

Caudle said he had business dealings with Landau both in and outside the Justice Department, and that his wife still owed Landau $900 on a $3,500 mink coat she bought for $1,500. He said he bought other fur coats from the same source for wholesale prices.

I. T. Cohen, Atlanta attorney associated with Landau, testified Nov. 28 about the fur coat transactions. Cohen said that Landau had connections in the fur industry and arranged to get an inexpensive coat — $563 wholesale — for Caudle, who wanted to give it to his daughter.

$5,000 From Plane Sale

Landau, according to Cohen, gave the coat to Caudle and a similar one to Caudle's former assistant, Turner L. Smith, for "Christmas presents" and wrote them off for income tax purposes as business expenses.

Cohen said he once gave Caudle a television set for Christmas.

Caudle had said that his wife, on her own initiative, bought a mink coat through Landau and helped Mrs. McClellan and Mrs. Royall buy similar coats.

Caudle's long quizzing was taken up again Nov. 29. He acknowledged that he had received $5,000 in 1950 as a commission for arranging the sale of an airplane to a tax investigator employed by two men later convicted of tax fraud. Caudle said the Attorney General had approved the transactions.

Caudle recounted the deal:

The investigator, Larry Knohl, had conferred with Caudle about his employers' tax difficulties. Later Knohl queried Caudle about buying an airplane which Knohl said he would need in a new business. Caudle put Knohl in touch with a man who had a twin-engined plane he wanted to sell. Knohl bought the plane for $30,000, and the seller later gave Caudle a check for $5,000 as a commission on the sale.

Subcommittee Counsel DeWind asked Caudle if he hadn't "engineered at least three delays" in the tax cases of Knohl's two employers before receiving the $5,000.

Caudle said he might have helped get two delays but that they were to permit one accused man's attorney to try another case out of town.

Tax Officials Ousted

While the tax hearings were in progress, the President and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue Nov. 28 announced that 19 tax officials had been fired and that another 12 had been asked to resign. Included in the list were James G. Smyth, Collector at San Francisco, and assorted deputy collectors, agents, inspectors, etc.

Among reasons given for discharges in individual cases were "insubordination," "false statements," "improper solicitation of taxpayer," "negligence," "unauthorized outside employment," etc.

Mobile Fraud Case

Public hearings resumed Dec. 3. John H. Mitchell, Justice Department attorney, told the Subcommitee that Caudle had discouraged him from pressing an Alabama tax fraud case.

The case involved the Gulf Coast Tobacco Company of Mobile. Two company officials were given prison sentences for their part in the $700,000 undeclared income case. Mitchell was assigned to investigate and prosecute the case.

Mitchell said Caudle showed a continued interest in the case and repeatedly cautioned him to be careful in handling it. Caudle, according to Mitchell, said that Rep. Frank W. Boykin (D Ala.) also was interested and suggested that he (Mitchell) talk with Boykin.

Finally, Mitchell said, former Deputy Attorney General Peyton Ford told him to short-circuit Caudle and report directly to Ford on the case.

Mitchell said there were widespread rumors in Mobile that the case had been fixed and that the names of Caudle and Boykin were "being bandied about in connection with it."

After he went ahead with the prosecution, Mitchell said, Caudle refused to talk with him and refused to give him any more tax cases.

Caudle and his former assistant, Smith, both told the Subcommittee, after Mitchell testified, that they wanted the Mobile case prosecuted but wanted to be sure the government had a good case. Caudle said he had received many calls froom Boykin about the matter and always told him that he would prosecute if he could make a case.

Smith told the Subcommittee, "I never realized or got the impression that Mr. Caudle was trying to throw the case — he just wanted to go down the middle."

$500,000 Shakedown?

Abraham Teitelbaum, Chicago lawyer, testified Dec. 4 that two men had tried to get $500,000 from him to settle his tax difficulties, with the threat that they had the influence to put him in jail if he didn't pay.

Teitelbaum said the men involved were Frank Nathan, Pittsburgh, and Bert K. Naster, Hollywood, Fla. They told him, Teitelbaum said, that they were in with a "clique" of government officials who were looking for chances to shake down "soft touches" like Teitelbaum.

The clique, Teitelbaum said, was represented to him as Caudle, Charles Oliphant, chief counsel to the Bureau of Internal Revenue; Jess Larson, General Services Administrator; and George J. Schoeneman and Joseph D. Nunan , Jr., both former Commissioners of Internal Revenue.

Teitelbaum told the Subcommittee the following story:

He was behind $130,000 in his federal taxes in 1950, but he expected a civil settlement with the government whereby he would pay the back taxes plus a five per cent negligence penalty. He met Nathan and Naster in Miami Beach, and they told him he was in more trouble than he thought but they could help.

He would go to jail, they said, unless he paid them $500,000. They claimed friendship with the federal officials.

After he turned down the proposition, his tax case was sent to Washington for criminal prosecution as a fraud case. Then he went to the Subcommittee for help.

Mrs. Menkin Backs Charge

This story was corroborated by Mrs. Sheryl Menkin, Chicago and Miami Beach. She said she had been present in April when Nathan and Naster told Teitelbaum:

"You're in trouble — bad trouble. You need help whether you know it or not. I've seen your records, your personal files in Washington. . .You'd better take help or be indicted and sent to the penitentiary."

Mrs. Menkin also said she saw Caudle on one occasion at Nathan's home and they were quite friendly. She said Nathan also appeared to be friendly with Meyer Rothwacks, chief of the criminal section of the Justice Department Tax Division.

Jess Larson told the Subcommittee the same day that Teitelbaum's story was false insofar as he was concerned. He said he had met Nathan but rejected his attempts to become friendly. Nathan, he said, had "hung around this town for years. . .selling names, selling reputations, trying to put himself in a favorable position."

Larson asked the group for legislation "to protect officials from being ruined" by such accusations. All others named by Teitelbaum made quick denials.

When the Subcommitee opened its Dec. 5 hearing, Chairman King said, "This Committee received no testimony that these government officials in fact participated in any way in the attempted shakedown to which Mr. Teitelbaum alleged he was subjected. Lacking such testimony we assume they did not."

Subcommitee member John W. Byrnes (R Wis.) said he would suspend judgment as the testimony was not all in.

Makes "Deals" For Living

Nathan then was questioned. He said he earned a living by "making deals," was a friend of Caudle's, but had met Oliphant only once. He hadn't talked tax matters with Caudle, Nathan said.

He called Teitelbaum's story "a dirty, filthy lie."

"Never at no time, not one moment, did we mention a tax case as God is my judge," Nathan told the Subcommittee. He suggested Teitelbaum made up the story as "an alibi" for his own tax difficulties.

He denied that Mrs. Menkin had accused him of trying to shake down Teitelbaum, as she had testified. Mrs. Menkin, he said, had told him once that Naster was trying to get $125,000 from Teitelbaum for help in the tax case. He said she asked if he could see Naster "and see what he can do for us."

Naster, Nathan testified, said Teitelbaum had asked for advice and that he (Naster) had referred him to a lawyer. Never, Nathan said, had Naster and Teitelbaum talked about the tax case in his presence.

Meyer Rothwacks testified Dec. 5. He said the statement by Mrs. Menkin that he was a good friend of Nathan's was "a vicious and scurrilous example of an attempt to smear me on an absolutely false basis." He said he had met Nathan a few times, and presumed he was a friend of Caudle's.

Oliphant Resigns

Oliphant resigned as chief counsel of the Internal Revenue Bureau Dec. 5, saying, "I find it beyond the limits of my endurance to protect my name and reputation and the prestige of the office I hold in the face of baseless and scurrilous charges given public currency however irresponsible the source."

Referring to Teitelbaum's testimony in his letter of resignation, Oliphant said, "I have never had any relationship with the alleged extortionists. The charge is fantastic, if not schemingly contrived to divert prosecution which I personally recommended on the basis of the facts before me.

"Without inquiry of me, without a shred of credence to link my name to the alleged plot, the forum of a responsible Congressional committee was made available for hurtling the sensational and irresponsible charges throughout the country."

His resignation was accepted the same day by the President.

The Subcommittee questioned Leslie Sale, Miami broker, Dec. 6. Sale, son-in-law of Nathan, had been named by Teitelbaum as one of the men who urged him to pay the $500,000.

Sale said that he had never talked about a shakedown with Teitelbaum or with Mrs. Menkin, nor, he said, had he ever heard of a shakedown prior to the Subcommittee investigation.

Says Oliphant Asked Delay

Knohl testified Dec. 6. He said there was no connection between the airplane deal and the tax troubles of his business associates. He said he didn't know Caudle would get a commission from the sale.

Kenneth Edlin, Chicago real estate man who said he was a friend of Teitelbaum's, told the Subcommittee that Teitelbaum had told him about the shakedown, but that when he (Edlin) asked Nathan about it, Nathan said "it may have been Naster" who was engineering the shakedown.

Richard C. Schwartz, assistant chief of the Penal Division in the Bureau of Internal Revenue, testified Dec. 7 that Oliphant had taken a personal interest in the Teitelbaum tax case.

Schwartz said he had been studying the Teitelbaum tax case and decided to send it back to Chicago for clarification. But Oliphant, he said, told him by phone to hold up action. Oliphant examined the case, Schwartz said, and then sent it back with the request that it be looked over to see whether it was a racket case instead of a simple fraud case.

Schwartz said that Oliphant explained to him that he had called the case back after talking with Henry W. Grunewald, Washington "investigator" who had loaned money to Oliphant and who was reputed to have been interested in the "shakedown."

R. D. McLean, Justice Department attorney, told the Subcommittee that tax fraud cases he had prepared against two Washington meat packing company owners had been held up by Oliphant until the statute of limitations ran out. McLean said that Rep. James H. Morrison (D La.) had intervened in the case in behalf of the two packers.

Reports Shakedown to Caudle

I. T. Cohen, Washington and Atlanta attorney, told the Subcommittee Dec. 10 that Teitelbaum had told him about the attempted shakedown and asked him for legal aid. Cohen then went to Caudle with the story, he said.

When Caudle was told that his name had been used, Cohen said, Caudle immediately called Frank Nathan, a Pittsburgh man who, according to Teitelbaum, had engineered the shakedown, and criticized him severely.

During his talk with Caudle, Cohen said, Caudle volunteered the guess that Grunewald might have been one of the men involved in the reported shakedown.

Caudle testified later the same day. He said it was a "natural deduction" that Grunewald had been involved, as Grunewald had a Teutonic accent as did a man who had made a threatening phone call to Teitelbaum. Caudle said he didn't know Grunewald.

Caudle also testified that he hadn't made an investigation into the shakedown report, nor had he informed his superiors.

Chairman King told Caudle he had been "guilty of at least such gross indiscretion as to constitute a breach of public trust."

McGrath Testifies

Attorney General McGrath defended administration of his department before the Subcommittee Dec. 11. He said he held no brief for the "indiscretions" of Caudle, but, "If ever a man had a right to depend or believe in a man, I felt I had a right to depend on Lamar Caudle."

The entire Justice Department could not be condemned on the strength of Caudle's action, McGrath said.

McGrath told the group that he had approved Caudle's acceptance of the $5,000 commission on the sale of an airplane because Caudle had said that no person connected with the government had taken part in the sale.

The first time he heard of the alleged shakedown, McGrath said, was when the story came out before the King Subcommittee. He said he received no reports from his subordinates about other irregularities uncovered by the Subcommittee.

Naster testified Dec. 12 that he had not tried to extort money from Teitelbaum, but that he had discussed tax matters with him. Naster said he had visited Caudle's home once to ask him about getting a passport. Naster was then on parole from a tax fraud conviction.

The Subcommittee visited Grunewald in a Washington hospital Dec. 12, but he declined to answer questions. He said he would testify only at an open hearing.

Oliphant Testifies

Oliphant testified Dec. 13. He denied any knowledge of any shakedown group.

He said he had been a close friend of Grunewald's but decided he was not a "reputable member of the community" when he asked him (Oliphant) not to tell the Subcommittee about their conversation regarding the Teitelbaum case. The conversation, Oliphant said, was casual. He said he had told Grunewald only that the Teitelbaum case probably would not be regarded as a racketeer case.

Oliphant returned for further questioning Dec. 14. He said he had let a tax prosecution case drop on one occasion because of a request by Rep. Morrison. The case involved two Washington, D. C. meat packers.

Morrison, he said, insisted on confering with him about the case, even though the delay occasioned by the conference let the statute of limitations run out on the case. Oliphant said there were other charges which could have been brought against the men. They were never prosecuted, however.

Oliphant said that Sen. Styles Bridges (R N.H.) had been interested in one tax case and that Grunewald had said he was working on the case in behalf of Sen. Bridges.

Hearings End For 1951

Grunewald was called before the Subcommittee Dec. 20 to testify in closed session. While he refused to utter a word, his attorney explained that Grunewald would not testify except at an open hearing.

He was called up again Dec. 21, and again refused to testify behind closed doors. The doors were opened, but Grunewald still did not tell the Subcommittee what it wanted to know. The only question he answered concerned his age, 59.

After giving this, Grunewald read a statement prepared by his attorney. It said Grunewald was being condemned in the eyes of the public and said the proceedings went "far astray of any legitimate purpose."

The hearings then came to an end for 1951. They were scheduled to reopen in 1952.

Monopoly Study

Summary — The House Judiciary Subcommittee on Monopoly opened hearings Jan. 22 on monopoly aspects of the defense mobilization effort. Headed by Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), the group concentrated its investigations on the aluminum industry. It also dealt with newsprint, steel and competition in key industries.

The Subcommittee was sharply critical of the government's aluminum program, charging it was "bogged down in confusion, inadequate procedures, diffuse authority and insufficient leadership."

The Subcommittee reported it found lack of competition in the newsprint and steel industries and allocation favoritism in the latter.

The group concluded that defense officials had been so concerned with increasing production that they had failed to give proper attention to preserving competition. "Ignorance and confusion on the part of defense officials" about basic anti-trust policies of the government were the chief factors endangering a competitive economy, the Subcommittee reported.

Aluminum Hearings

First witness before the group was Sen. James E. Murray (D Mont.). He criticized proposals that the U.S. underwrite construction of an aluminum plant to be operated in British Columbia by the Aluminum Company of Canada. Murray said such aid should go instead to new aluminum producers in this country.

Murray declared that Alcan and the Aluminum Company of America were "commonly owned corporations" which had monopolized aluminum production prior to World War II. And, he added, although the government had underwritten an Alcan plant in Canada during that war, this country had been able to meet its aluminum needs only through government construction of plants in the U.S.

Following Murray to the witness stand, Richard Reynolds, Jr., of the Reynolds Metal Co., testified Jan. 23 that Alcoa was getting most of the aluminum produced by the first Alcan plant anyway. He opposed the idea of underwriting construction of a second Canadian plant because he claimed it would not add a single pound of aluminum to supplies the U.S. needed "now." It would require six years to complete the plant, he said. Meanwhile, U.S. companies could produce aluminum "cheaper and better" if aid were given them.

Other witnesses included Jess Larson, head of the General Services Administration. He said "there is a crying need for all the metal we can get" but that he had not been given the signal to enter into additional contracts to procure aluminum from Canadian sources.

The issue of monopoly re-entered the hearings Jan. 25 during the testimony of Graham Morison, Assistant Attorney General and head of the Justice Department's Anti - Trust Division. He said the need for expanded aluminum production presented "the only kind of situation in which there would be any hope" of getting new competition into the domestic aluminum production-industry.

He indicated that aid connected with aluminum procurement should be aimed at helping new producers, who would present the competition.

Cites Delay in Priorities

The Subcommittee was told Jan. 26 that government delays in issuing materials priorities were holding up new production of scarce aluminum for defense.

The statement was made by D. A. Rhoades, vice president and general manager of the Kaiser Aluminum and Chemical Corp.

On Jan. 29, Nathaniel V. Davis, president of Aluminum Ltd., of Montreal, Canada, denied his company was a monopoly. Although it was the only primary aluminum producer in Canada, he said, it competed on American and other foreign markets for 85 per cent of its sales. He also testified that the U. S. got cheaper aluminum from Canada during World War II "than that obtained from defense plants built in this country, taking into account the loss sustained on the disposal of government-built plants at a fraction of their construction cost." He said the U. S. saved $40 million on Canadian aluminum.

Jan. 30, Davis confirmed earlier testimony that the Aluminum Company of Canada, held by Aluminum, Ltd., had shipped some 11 million pounds of aluminum ingot to Communist-controlled countries in the first 10 months of 1950 before export licenses were cancelled.

Livingston Satterthwaite, a State Department official, told the Subcommitee sites in Canada and the U.S. should be considered impartially in expanding aluminum production for the defense effort.

Sales at a Loss

The sale of government-held aluminum to private companies, at a loss, was labelled "sheer stupidity" by Chairman Celler at Feb. 2 hearings of the Monopoly Subcommittee.

I. W. Wilson, vice president of the Aluminum Company of America (Alcoa), told the Subcommittee that his concern bought 225 million pounds of aluminum from the federal stockpile from 1946-48 for 14 cents a pound. The government paid 17 cents a pound for it, and Wilson observed the government "undoubtedly" lost money on the transaction.

Several officials told the Subcommittee that they favored buying aluminum from any sources available on reasonable price terms. Roscoe Seybold, vice chairman of the Munitions Board, so testified Feb. 2, and Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer took the same position Feb. 7.

Manly Fleischmann, National Production Administrator, said that his agency would give priorities assistance to aluminum producers to help them expand production facilities.

Carl H. Burton, secretary of the Aluminum Research Institute of Chicago, complained to the Subcommittee Feb. 5 that there was no provision for stockpiling aluminum scrap, and that it was withheld from the open market.

Seeks Alaska Plant

Delegate E. L. Bartlett (D Alaska) asked the Subcommittee to urge government officials to build an aluminum plant at Skagway, Alaska.

The Subcommittee concluded hearings on the aluminum industry Feb. 9.

Final witness was Dewey Anderson, Public Affairs Institute. He told the group that the government should not aid in construction of a proposed Alaskan aluminum plant.

Chairman Celler revealed Feb. 9 that Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson had decided not to underwrite the proposed plant. Wilson, according to Celler, said there was no forseeable need for the Alaskan or a Canadian aluminum plant.

Subcommittee member Edwin E. Willis (D La.) said Feb. 14 that the aluminum expansion program had been "badly fumbled" by government agencies. He said new plants should be constructed without delay and suggested that the Gulf Coast area, particularly Louisiana, would be a good site for aluminum production.

Report Critical

In a report March 6 the Subcommittee sharply criticized the government's aluminum program.

The report urged faster action to aid new independent producers and charged that the program was "bogged down in confusion, inadequate procedures, diffuse authority and insufficient leadership." It further cited a tendency to place "almost insurmountable obstacles" in the way of small new firms to the advantage of Aluminum Company of America, Kaiser and Reynolds.

The Subcommittee concluded that the U.S. should attempt to underwrite a $5 million British Columbia project of Aluminum Company of Canada "only as a last resort."

Steel Hearings

Dollar-a-year men in the National Production Authority showed favoritism to General Motors Corp. in allocating scarce steel supplies, according to testimony presented to the Subcommittee May 21, as it turned to an inquiry of the steel situation.

Col. William George Knight, an NPA transportation official, said GM got steel while other locomotive manufacturers, General Electric Corp., Baldwin - Lima - Hamilton Corp., Fairbanks-Morse and American Locomotive Co., got only "the run around" — and no steel.

Subcommittee Chairman Celler identified H. P. Rankin, Jr., assistant sales manager of Republic Steel Corp., as the NPA dollar-a-year man who approved the steel allocation for General Motors. Celler said General Motors made a $40 million plant expansion loan to Republic to be repaid in steel products.

The applications of the four other locomotive manufacturers were lost twice, Knight testified. An inquiry about the papers got nowhere until the Subcommittee began to look into the problem. Then the papers suddenly reappeared, he said.

Melvin W. Cole, chief of the iron and steel section of NPA, told the Subcommittee he was unable to explain how GM's application got fast action while the papers of the other companies were lost.

"Liberties With Facts"

In a preliminary report June 11, the Subcommittee charged that Horace B. McCoy, Assistant Administrator for the National Production Authority, gave a "grossly misleading explanation" of steel allocations.

McCoy "took liberties with the facts" in attempting to explain why General Motors Corp. received preferred treatment in obtaining steel over four other competitors, the report said.

The Subcommittee also demanded "complete information" from NPA on why Col. William G. Knight of the NPA transportation and equipment division was forced to resign under protest June 8.

Resuming hearings, the group heard H. Graham Morison, Assistant Attorney General, say June 12 that the Justice Department was trying to weed out of government agencies the business advisory committees which operated "under a cloak of government authority but without government check."

John D. Small, Chairman of the Munitions Board, testified that 26 advisory committees and 65 "task force" groups were in existence.

Report on Steel

In its final report on steel, the Monopoly Subcommittee said Oct. 27 that defense officials were so concerned with increasing production they failed to give proper attention to preserving competition. The report said the chief factors endangering a competitive economy were "ignorance and confusion on the part of defense officials" about basic anti-trust policies of the government.

In some instances, the group held, "voluntary" and "cooperative" actions were being allowed at industry meetings, despite advice from the Department of Justice and the President, which might lead "persons who voluntarily cooperated" into "unwarranted danger of prosecution."

The report also suggested the President clear up doubt about the powers and duties of the Office of Defense Mobilization and the Munitions Board, and recommended that the Defense Department maintain up-to-date information on the dispersal of contracts through industries.

Newsprint Study

In another of its monopoly investigations, the Celler Subcommittee released a report May 27 on a 10-month study of the newsprint industry. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, p. 650.) The document recommended that anti-trust laws be vigorously enforced against American producers and Canadians as well. (For more on newsprint, see below.)

The report said there was "evidence to indicate that some American interests have donned the cloak of foreign immunity" by crossing the Canadian border fiscally "to avoid the consequences of the anti - trust laws of this country." Some companies were accused of taking "refuge behind the corporate veil and to claim separate identity for affiliates and subsidiaries" in Canada.

The report urged the U. S. Attorney General to study the group's findings and take appropriate action, urged Congress to pass laws fostering expansion and competition in the industry, and urged the development of timber resources in Alaska as a source of newsprint.

Newsprint

A House Interstate Commerce Subcommittee held hearings during June and July on the availability of sulphur in the newsprint industry and dealt briefly with means of alleviating the shortage of pulpwood for newsprint.

The Subcommittee was told June 13 that industries other than the newsprint industry get first call on "dangerously low" domestic sulphur stocks.

John F. Wood, chief of the sulphur unit of the National Production Authority, stated that NPA would try to "support fully" steel, petroleum, rubber and basic chemicals as "essential users" of sulphur in the defense program.

Wood predicted that the newsprint industry would have to take a cutback if it operated at a greater rate in 1951 than it did in 1950. He said a 722,000-ton deficit was in prospect in 1951 domestic sulphur stocks.

The group heard another National Production Authority official testify June 18. The witness, G. J. Ticoulate, said he saw no immediate need for newspapers to cut down on the number of their editions as a newsprint - saving feature. He declared, however, that the shortage of sulphur, needed to produce newsprint, was a critical one.

Delegate E. L. Bartlett (D Alaska) July 27 urged developement of Alaska timber as a source of pulpwood which could be controlled by this country.

Other Congressional groups in addition to the House Commerce Subcommittee looked into the newsprint shortage in 1951. Among them were the Subcommittee on Newprint of the Senate Small Business Committee and the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Monopoly.

For the 1950 newsprint study, see CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 650.

Atomic Information

S 2233 — P.L. 235

The first amendment to the Atomic Energy Act of 1946 became law Oct. 30, 1951. It permitted the United States to share with friendly nations certain restricted data pertaining to atomic energy, but only under a number of safeguards.

Twin bills (S 2233 and HR 5646), both with the unanimous backing of the Joint Atomic Energy Committee, were reported in each chamber Oct. 8, 1951. The Senate measure was passed by voice vote by the upper chamber Oct. 11. The House tabled its bill in lieu of the Senate bill. On Oct. 16 the House passed by unanimous consent the measure that Sen. Brien McMahon (D Conn.) chairman of the Joint Atomic Energy Committee, had said would furnish "substantial benefits" to this nation's atomic energy program.

The measure was approved by the President Oct. 30 and became Public Law 235.

The law permits the United States to enter into specific arrangements with other nations relative to the sharing of restricted data on refining, purification and subsequent treatment of source materials, reactor development, production of fissionable materials and research and development of atomic energy.

Background — Until the Atomic Energy Act was passed in 1946, forbidding the exchange of military atomic information, the United States, Britain and Canada shared such information under the wartime Quebec Agreement. Since the Act was passed these nations have continued to exchange limited atomic data but not for industrial or military purposes (CQ Almanac, Vol. 2, 1946, p. 505.)

Atomic Progress

A program to develop a hydrogen bomb and other atomic weapons had made considerable progress by the fall of 1951, the annual report of the joint Senate - House Atomic Energy Committee indicated. The report was presented to Congress Oct. 19.

Were an enemy to atack this nation, the United States would be capable of delivering a "swift, sure, and terrible. . .atomic counter-blow," according to the report. The U.S. was now able also to anticipate atomic developments in Russia and elsewhere through a perfected intelligence system, the Committee said.

It recommended, however, that "greater boldness and more scientific and technical daring should be brought to bear upon the program."

Sen. Brien McMahon (D Conn.) chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, in a Senate speech Sept. 18 had called for a six-fold expansion of the present $1 billion a year atomic energy program, and for mass production of atomic weapons. He introduced a resolution (S Con Res. 46) calling for "all out" atomic production and development, instead of confining the amount spent on the atomic phase to only about three cents of the defense dollar.

In action growing out of McMahon's speech, the Joint Committee on Oct. 17 unanimously agreed to ask the Atomic Energy Commission and the Defense Department to prepare for Congress by Jan. 3, 1952, a detailed report on "maximizing" the role of atomic energy in the defense of the United States.

The request was made in the form of a special resolution which would go to the Defense Department and the AEC without requiring prior approval of the Senate and House. McMahon said this procedure was followed because of the imminence of Congressional adjournment.

The data for which the Committee called included: Estimates of the amounts of money required to "maximize" the atomic role; specific extent and type of new facilities estimated to be required; priorities in materials and manpower involved; probable impact upon other defense projects and the national economy as a whole; joint views of Defense and AEC as to the precise program that should be carried out in the atomic energy field.

HR 5448. Provide for suspension of duty on imports of zinc until March 31, 1953, unless domestic price falls below 18 cents a pound, when such suspension shall be revoked. DOUGHTON (D N.C.). House Ways and Means reported Oct. 18. Passed House Oct. 19. (See story, p. 488.)

HR 5693. Impose a duty of 3 cents a pound on fresh or frozen tuna until March 31, 1953, and direct Tariff Commission and Interior Dept. to make studies and provide Congress with information to formulate a long-range tariff policy for protection of domestic tuna industry. CAMP (D Ga.). House Ways and Means reported Oct. 12. Passed House under suspension of rules Oct. 15. (See story, p. 489.)

Senate Votes: Defense Production Act

Defense Production Act of 1951 (S 1717). Amend and extend Defense Production Act of 1950 and Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended. (See story, p. 438.) Votes on this as follows:

1. Williams (R Del.) amendment suspending price supports on agricultural commodities. Rejected, 4-78, June 27.
2. Wherry (R Neb.) amendment banning ceilings below (a) price at time of ceiling order, (b) Jan.-Feb. 1951 price, or (c) ceiling on any farm product prior to enactment of 1951 extension act. Rejected, 39-49, June 27.
3. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) substitute for section 2 limiting beef price rollbacks, to apply limitation on rollbacks to beef and mutton. Rejected, 25-63, June 27.
4. Douglas (D Ill.) amendment deleting section 2 limiting price rollbacks. Rejected, 26-61, June 27.
5. Moody (D Mich.) amendment deferring for 60 days after enactment the effective date of section 2 limiting rollbacks on beef. Rejected, 22-61, June 27.
6. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) amendment providing that location of defense plants shall be determined so as to provide greatest utilization of human and material resources, dispersal of production capacity for defense purposes, and relief of concentration in overburdened areas. Rejected, 25-56, June 27.
7. Butler (R Neb.) amendment prohibiting OPS from placing any restrictions, quotas, or other limitations on livestock slaughtering. Agreed to, 47-33, June 27.
8. Dirksen (R Ill.) substitute for section 5 (rent control) to terminate present rent control, authorize President to control rents in critical defense areas according to a specified formula, provide for relaxation of construction credit controls in any area where rents are controlled, and provide for rent adjustments in hardship cases. Rejected, 19-68, June 28.

Senate Votes: Defense Production Act

1. Wherry (R Neb.) amendment prohibiting price ceilings lower than either (a) price prevailing just before regulation, or (b) price prevailing Jan. 25-Feb. 24, 1951. Agreed to, 49-33, June 28.
2. Thye (R Minn.) amendment providing that no ceiling prices for milk or butter-fat shall be imposed unless and until the Secretary of Agriculture determines they are fair and reasonable. Rejected, 29-52, June 28.
3. Long (D La.) motion to reconsider vote by which Senate adopted Butler (R Neb.) amendment prohibiting slaughtering quotas (Vote No. 7, p. 529.) Rejected, 27-53, June 29.
4. Moody (D Mich.) amendment to substitute a 9-month extension of Defense Production Act of 1950, a 9-month extension of rent control with 20 per cent increase approved by committee, provide for a Small Defense Plants Administration, and continue import controls on fats and oils for two years. Rejected, 22-59, June 29.
5. Question of whether Senator Lehman (D N.Y.) should be excused from voting on basis of reasons given. Refused permission, 35-39, June 29.
6. Question of whether Senator Benton (D Conn.) should be excused from voting on basis of reasons given. Refused permission, 34-41, June 29.
7. Passage of bill. Passed, 71-10, June 29.
8. Price Control Revision (S 2170). Amend price control provisions of Defense Production Act so that prices shall reflect "necessary and unavoidable" cost increases with due allowance for other costs. (See story, p. 462.) Capehart (R Ind.) amendment to add provision reimposing slaughtering quotas. Maybank (D S.C.) motion to table Capehart amendment. Agreed to, 49-16, Oct. 4.

Senate Votes: Taxes

Revenue Act of 1951 (HR 4473). Increase taxes on individual and corporate incomes, increase and extend excise taxes. (See story, p. 409.) Votes on this as follows:

1. Capehart (R Ind.) amendment to committee amendment concerning taxation of mutual savings banks, to provide that a minimum of 15 per cent of income be set aside, tax-free, for reserves, with a larger percentage allowed so long as total reserves, surplus, and undivided profits do not exceed 10 per cent of total deposits or accounts on the last day of the taxable year. Agreed to, 41-28, Sept. 22.
2. Committee amendment providing for taxation of income of mutual savings banks, savings and loan associations, and cooperative banks, after deduction of expenses, dividends paid depositors, amounts set aside for reserves, and amounts repaid on loans from the U.S. or from mutual funds. Agreed to, 60-19, Sept. 24.
3. Williams (R Del.) amendment to committee amendment concerning taxation of cooperatives, to provide that cooperatives with assets over $100,000 may distribute no more than 50 per cent of earnings in the form of irrevocable 2-year (5-year for producer cooperatives) certificates, with remainder to be distributed in cash or merchandise, and any income not allocated or paid out shall be subject to tax. Rejected, 7-72, Sept. 24.
4. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) amendment to strike out section permitting dealers in municipal bonds to include such bonds in computation of invested capital base (for purposes of computing excess-profits tax liability) provided interest on such bonds is reported in excess-profits-tax net income. Rejected, 22-65, Sept. 25.
5. Committee amendment making special relief provisions with respect to excess profits tax. Agreed to, 70-15, Sept. 25.
6. Committee amendment to delete provision applying excess-profits tax to all earnings in excess of 75 per cent of income during base period, and restore existing provisions applying excess-profits tax to earnings in excess of 85 per cent of income during base period. Agreed to, 62-20, Sept. 25.
7. Lehman (D N.Y.) amendment to make corporation tax increase effective Jan. 1, 1951, instead of April 1, 1951. Rejected, 33-54, Sept. 26.
8. Hendrickson (R N.J.) amendment to exempt $1,440 of retirement pay, annuity, or pension from individual income tax. Rejected, 36-50, Sept. 26.

Senate Votes: Taxes; Contract Renegotiations

1. Revenue Act of 1951 (HR 4473) (continued). Douglas (D Ill.) (and 11 other Senators) amendment to increase capital-gains tax from 25 per cent to 28 per cent. Rejected, 26-53, Sept. 28.
2. Revenue Act of 1951 (HR 4473). Humphrey (D Minn.) (and 5 other Senators) amendment to eliminate tax advantage of income-splitting by setting up new surtax schedule for married persons which would lower tax on married persons making less than $10,000, and increase tax on married persons in upper brackets. Rejected, 15-62, Sept. 28.
3. Revenue Act of 1951 (HR 4473). Moody (D Mich.) amendment to eliminate excise tax on electric vacuum cleaners and washing machines. Agreed to, 52-22, Sept. 28.
4. Revenue Act of 1951 (HR 4473). Passage of bill. Passed, 57-19, Sept. 28.
5. Renegotiation Act of 1951 (HR 1724). Provide for renegotiation of defense contracts originally awarded on a negotiated basis. (See story, p. 468.) Douglas (D Ill.) amendment to eliminate power of Renegotiation Board to determine exemptions from renegotiation requirements. Agreed to, 42-39, Feb. 21.
6. Renegotiation Act of 1951 (HR 1724). Ferguson (R Mich.) motion to table Douglas (D Ill.) motion to reconsider vote on above amendment. Rejected, 41-41, Feb. 21. (Sponsors of amendments which have been agreed to frequently move immediately after the favorable vote to have the vote reconsidered. Another supporter then moves to table the motion to reconsider. If the motion to table is agreed on, any further attempt to reverse the acceptance of the amendment is thereby blocked. If the motion to table is rejected, supporters of the amendment lose control of the situation, and opponents can then drive for reconsideration. In this case, the motion to table having failed, the Douglas-Ferguson group were obliged to allow a vote on the question of reconsideration. See votes 7 and 8 below).
7. Renegotiation Act of 1951 (HR 1724). Douglas (D Ill.) motion to reconsider vote by which Douglas amendment, above, was adopted. Agreed to, 42-40, Feb. 21.
8. Renegotiation Act of 1951 (HR 1724). Douglas (D Ill.) amendment, on reconsideration. Rejected, 41-42, Feb. 21.

House Votes: Defense Production Act

1. Temporary Controls Extension (H J Res 278). Continue rent control, import control of fats and oils, and the Defense Production Act for one month. (See story, p. 461.) Rule (H Res 294) providing for consideration and one hour of general debate. Agreed to, 297-85, June 29.
2. Temporary Controls Extension (H J Res 278). Cooley (D N.C.) amendment to ban rollbacks or imposition of additional ceilings during temporary extension. Agreed to, 232-159, June 29.

Defense Production Act of 1951 (HR 3871). Amend and extend the Defense Production Act and the Housing and Rent Act. (See story, p. 438.) Votes as follows:

3. Andresen (R Minn.) amendment to extend import controls on fats and edible oils (except coconuts and coconut products), peanuts, dairy products, rice and rice products, to June 30, 1953, and prohibit any import of such products which would impair or reduce domestic production or result in any unnecessary expenditure under government price-support program. Agreed to, 266-147, July 20.
4. Davis (R Wis.) amendment to establish a single central government agency as claimant for construction and supply needs of state and local governments and their tax-supported agencies. Rejected, 164-251, July 20.
5. Hope (R Kan.) amendment to prohibit quotas, restrictions, or any other limitations on quantity of livestock which may be handled or slaughtered by any processor. Agreed to, 249-167, July 20.
6. Wolcott (R Mich.) amendment to delete authority of President to acquire additional plants and facilities, erect plants, and engage in the marketing, transportation and storage of critical materials, and provide instead for installation of additional facilities in government plants, and installation of government-owned equipment in private plants. Agreed to, 233-184, July 20.
7. Hardy (D Va.) amendment to delete authority to create new government corporations by Executive Order. Agreed to, 250-167, July 20.
8. Committee amendment to prohibit ceiling on any agricultural commodity below 90 per cent of price received by producers on May 19, 1951. (Effect of this amendment was to prohibit proposed beef price rollbacks, but permit the first rollback of 10 per cent to stand). Agreed to, 234-183, July 20.

House Votes: Defense Production Act

1. Cole (R Kan.) amendment to prohibit ceilings on any livestock products which do not allow reasonable margin of profit to each segment of the processing industry on each species of livestock. Rejected, 166-250, July 20.
2. Davis (D Ga.) amendment to freeze all prices, wages, salaries, and other compensation at level of July 7, 1951, except for agricultural products selling below parity. Rejected, 172-243, July 20.
3. Poage (D Tex.), Cole (R Kan.) amendment to establish a ceiling-price formula which would include all direct and indirect costs, including parity, and allow profit not less than 85 per cent of average profit during three most profitable years, 1946 to 1949 inclusive. Rejected, 81-233. July 20.
4. D'Ewart (R Mont.) amendment to exempt strategic and critical metals and minerals from ceilings when such materials cannot be produced economically because of marginal or submarginal character of the source, or necessity of installing additional facilities or equipment. Rejected, 200-216, July 20.
5. Committee amendment to delete authority to license and suspend licenses of certain businesses covered by the act, as means of enforcing price controls. Agreed to, 334-81, July 20.
6. Committee amendment to delete authority to control commodity speculation. Agreed to, 242-172, July 20.
7. Cole (R Kan.) motion to recommit the bill. Rejected, 117-299, July 20.
8. Passage of bill. Passed, 323-92, July 20.

Senate Votes: Pricing Practices; Ship Subsidy; Airline Subsidy

1. Pricing Practices (S 719). Amend Robinson-Patman Act to make good faith a complete defense to a charge of price discrimination made to meet the equally low price of a competitor. (See story, p. 487.) Kefauver (D Tenn.) amendment to bar actions which may substantially lessen competition or create monopoly. Rejected, 38-39, Aug. 2.
2. Pricing Practices (S 719). Magnuson (D Wash.) motion to recommit. Rejected, 33-45, Aug. 2.
3. Pricing Practices (S 719). Passage of bill. Passed, 42-34, Aug. 2.
4. Merchant Marine Act Amendment (S 241). Broaden eligibility for construction subsidies, limit right of government to repossess ships, broaden definition of construction reserve funds, and exempt certain of such funds from income and excess-profits taxes, and lower age limit for obsolescense of vessels from 17 to 12 years. Williams (R Del.) motion to recommit. Rejected, 34-47, Aug. 21.
5. Merchant Marine Act Amendment (S 241). Williams (R Del.) amendment to strike out sections broadening eligibility for construction-differential subsidies. Rejected, 32-39, Aug. 21.
6. Airline Subsidies (S 436). Provide for payment of direct subsidy to airlines instead of including subsidy payments in pay for carrying air mail. (See story, p. 484.) McMahon (D Conn.) amendment limiting subsidies for U.S. airlines operating overseas to those holding certificates as mail carriers. Agreed to, 53-28, Sept. 19.
7. Airline Subsidies (S 436). McCarran (D Nev.) amendment authorizing the Civil Aeronautics Board to enter into subsidy contracts with U.S. airlines, of up to three years for domestic lines and up to 10 years for lines operating to foreign countries. Agreed to, 62-14, Sept. 19.
8. Airline Subsidies (S 436). Douglas (D Ill.) amendment providing that payments for foreign transportation of mail shall be based upon actual costs, plus a fair return on investment. Rejected, 23-58, Sept. 19.

82nd CONGRESS--
BILLS INTRODUCED
(First Session)

LEGISLATION SUBMITTED IN 1951

On the pages immediately following Congressional Quarterly Almanac lists all public legislation introduced during the first session of the 82nd Congress. Private bills, usually to pay claims of individuals against the government, are not included.

Approximately 9,600 pieces of legislation were introduced during this period. Of this number about 2,700 were submitted by Senators, about 6,900 by Representatives. Of the total number approximately 7,500 were public measures, and are listed in the following pages, while about 2,000 were private bills.

The listing is arranged as follows: First, it is published in order of the eight regular categories maintained by Congressional Quarterly; under each category the Senate is listed first, then the House; all listing is alphabetical, by names of the Congressmen.
